SAFETY DEPOSIT BOX MAY SOLVE MURDER PROBLEM

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 6.—The contents of a safe deposit box in a local bank, believed to have been opened by an administrator of her estate, to be appointed probably today by County Judge Crawford, will, in the opinion of officers, have an apparent bearing upon the investigation of the murder last Friday of Mrs. Moe Hahne, for which her husband, J. Warren Hahne, wealthy contractor and real estate man, is being held.

The box is known to contain a deed to a cemetery lot in Colorado, where Mrs. Hahne is to be buried and police also believe that in it will be found the $2,000 worth of diamonds belonging to the slain woman, and which have been missing since her death.

Hahne claims these were stolen by an unidentified person whom he claims killed his wife.

In addition to the jewels, police also hope to find in the safety box the diary of the murdered woman. She is reported to have kept a close record of her life, and is said to have been sensitive. With a record of her feelings for some time prior to the murder, police say, they expect to establish whether she had enemies whom she feared and if there were domestic difficulties between the couple.

Police argue that the jewels might have been taken by anyone, but that the diary could only have been taken by a person or persons who had reason to fear its contents.

Bank officials yesterday refused to open the box for Hahne, who was taken in custody by police to the bank.

FOUR STATES TO ALLOCATE WATER OF THE COLUMBIA

SPOKANE, Jan. 6.—After an all day conference on plans for the allocation of water rights of the Columbia River and its tributaries above the confluence of the Snake and Columbia rivers, state engineers and United States Reclamation and power commission representatives adjourned their session last night to meet here again January 19.

The engineers said that when they meet again, they hope to draw up a "Columbia river compact" that will be acceptable to the legislatures of the four northwest states. In the meantime the state engineers of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana will confer with their respective state officials and civic bodies interested in irrigation and hydro-electric power to accurately determine the water requirements of their states from the Columbia river system, it was announced.

All of the state engineers pledged their support to the development of the Columbia basin irrigation project. The fixing of the amount of water needed by Montana to care for vested water rights of citizens of that state and the setting of the storage limits for Priest and Pond O'Reille lakes in Northern Idaho, were the only main question to be determined when the conference adjourned, it was said.

Now is the time to order your land plaster. We are taking orders for delivery off car to arrive soon. Get our price. Denn-Gerretsen Co.

DOME OF ST. PAUL'S BECOMES A MENACE

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The great dome of St. Paul's Cathedral is declared by the city surveyor to be in such unsafe condition that the municipal authorities, according to the Daily Mirror, have served notice upon the official custodians of the Cathedral that they officially regard the dome "as a dangerous structure."

The condition of the dome has caused anxiety for some years, owing to cracks in the supporting pillars, and large sums have been spent in remedial measures.

The dome is in no immediate danger of falling, it is said.

One Wife on Approval

by VIOLET DARE

Author of "Luxury of Love," "The Husband Maker," etc.

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED

CYNTHIA and JIM LELAND, bride and groom, settle in their new home to find that Jim's mother expects to rule their lives. Cynthia rebels; Jim's devotion to his mother blinds him.

TODAY'S INSTALMENT

VI—OUT OF THE PAST

THE dog show was brand new to Cynthia, and most interesting. She stood clutching the top rail of the fence while the judge walked about, looking at the Newfoundlands, and then watched while the dogs walked and ran around the ring.

VIOLET DARE

Finally, as the dogs were lined up in front of the judge, Graham glanced up at Cynthia and smiled.

"Oh, I do hope his dog wins!" she whispered to Jim. "It's such a beautiful one. How thrilling it must be to go in there with your own dog and wonder if he'll win—"

She stopped, then suddenly joined in the applause that had broken out all around the ring. The judge had handed the blue ribbon to Philip Graham.

"How wonderful!" She waved to Graham, and hurried down to the gate at the end of the fence to shake hands with Graham as he came out. Jim followed more slowly. The dog show was all right, of course—still, he didn't exactly like having Cynthia rush after this fellow so enthusiastically. What if they had known each other years before!

Cynthia and Graham walked back toward him, the huge dog ambling beside them.

"Jim, what do you think? Phil says he'll give me a dog. Isn't that gorgeous?" Cynthia cried. "I can't think of anything I'd rathed have."

Jim mumbled something. A Newfoundland in their house! What in the world would they do with it?

"And, Jim, Phil can stay all night with us! Isn't that great?" Cynthia went on. "He has to be here for two days longer. Oh, it's so nice to see you again, Phil. After you rushed off to Europe—"

She stopped abruptly, flushing. Phil Graham glanced away from her as abruptly. To both had come the same memory, that of the evening when he had asked her to marry him, and she, divided between embarrassment and delight, had told him that she was engaged to Jim.

"By George, there's a good dog!" Phil cut in, breaking the uncomfortable silence. "That Airdale over there. He's likely to win in his class. Isn't he a corker?" he added, to Jim.

"Sure is." Jim was not too enthusiastic. "It's great that you can come to us tonight, Graham. Fine to have you."

He and Cynthia sauntered on, looking at the other dogs, while Phil put his own back in its place, to join them later near the door. As they all left the building Jim looked at his wife curiously. She seemed to have regained the gaiety and sparkle that she had so mysteriously lost of late. Had Phil Graham been responsible for this? he asked himself. He did not doubt for a moment that his wife loved him; in fact, Cynthia's adoration was sometimes a bit embarrassing. But certainly she and this fellow Graham were unusually good friends!

When they reached home Frances, the maid, came running to meet them.

"Oh, Mr. Leland, your mother telephoned, and said that it was most important for her to talk to you; she wanted you to telephone the minute you got in."

"I'll call her at once. What time did she phone?"

"Quite a long time ago, about nine o'clock, and then again, just half an hour ago."

Jim hurried to the library telephone without waiting to take off his overcoat. Cynthia promptly divested Phil Graham of his hat and coat, and led the way to the kitchen.

"We'll get some supper ourselves," she gaily announced to Frances. "Phil, can you still make such marvelous cheese toast as you used to? Let's have that, and—let's see what else is in the refrigerator." She knelt before it, and began to rummage about. "Mushrooms—some cold chicken—cream—baked ham—oh, we're going to have a gorgeous party, Phil! Look in that cake box, up there on the pantry shelf—isn't there half a maple nut cake there?

She forgot the moments when she had longed to escape.

I thought so. Get it out, and some bread for the toast, from that other box."

Jim rejoined them to find Cynthia wearing a charming little purple rubber apron with flaunting yellow flowers on the pockets, while Graham had on one of cook's serviceable gingham ones. He was stirring the delicious smelling contents of a deep saucepan on the electric stove, and Cynthia was spreading a red and white checked tablecloth on the kitchen table, and singing gaily.

"Oh, Jim— you're just in time to slice the cheese—very thin—for the toast," she told him.

"Sorry, but I can't," he answered almost curtly. "Mother wants to see me at once, so I'll have to go over there. Don't know what time I'll be back."

"Oh, Jimbo! What a shame that you'll miss the party!" Then, suddenly remembering that that wasn't quite the thing to say first, she added, "I hope there's nothing serious the matter."

"I don't know exactly—she couldn't tell me much over the phone," he answered, and, kissing her hastily and shaking hands with Graham, departed.

A Request—and a Promise.

WOMAN GOVERNOR TO SOON USE AXE ON USELESS HEADS

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Jan. 6.—Mrs. Nellie Taylor Ross, Wyoming's first woman governor, today got down to the task that faces her as executive of the state of Wyoming.

Her routine called for an early appearance at the executive chambers where she will continue her work on her message and budget recommendations to the state legislature which convenes January 13.

While Governor Ross has refused steadfastly to reveal just what the nature of the budget recommendations will be, it is generally understood in Wyoming political circles that they will hold out for a policy of sharp retrenchment in state expenditures, the axe falling most heavily on state house employes and salaries.

Throughout the night telegrams of congratulations from the governors of many states and from persons in all walks of life continued to pour into her office.

And so today, Wyoming, the trail blazer in the matter of woman's rights, will settle down to a two-year period during which the legislative reins will be held by one of those recognized by statute more than half a century ago.

The price on land plaster is $12.15 per ton, instead of $12.50 as announced in Saturday's paper. Denn-Gerretsen Co.

"WET" SERVICE IN ATLANTA ROUSES IRE OF MINISTER

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 6.—Charges that Atlanta ministers "have lapsed into a weak-kneed attitude and are missing a great opportunity to become a strong influence in the city's moral life by failing to demand strict enforcement of the prohibition law," today were before the Evangelical Ministers' Association, advanced by Dr. W. M. Memminger, of All Saints Episcopal Church, who last night declined to stand for re-election as head of the organization.

The retiring president, who was succeeded by Dr. D. Witherspoon Dodge, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, declared "whiskey is being served in some hotels and clubs," in the city, and added that the Ministers Association has ttaken "no strong, uncompromising position to result in strict enforcement" of the dry laws.
