HEALTH BULLETIN

WHOOPING COUGH.

(State Board of Health)

Whooping cough ranks third in fatalities among the communicable disease of early childhood. This statement is made as a refutation of the prevalent belief that whooping cough is a disease of mild character and of little importance. Scarlet fever has resulted in less than half as many fatalities as the whooping cough in the state of Oregon during the last ten years. Not only is whooping cough serious in itself, but not infrequently pulmonary tuberculosis follows in its wake.

Whooping cough is prevented with the greatest difficulty. Typhoid fever, smallpox, diphtheria, and scarlet fever have been conquered and measures are available for their complete control.

We know that whooping cough is caused by a definite germ and we know it spreads. But just as long as parents keep on thinking that the disease is a mild disorder and hence maintain indifference to the efforts of the health officials to check its spread, just so long will epidemics continue to exact their toll of young lives. Another reason for lack of control is that often the disease is not recognized, for the well known "whoop" may not occur until a week or even two weeks after the onset. In the meantime the child is spreading the infection all over the neighborhood, for it is during this period that the disease is most contagious. This fact emphasizes the necessity for keeping a child, suffering with what may seem to be just an ordinary cold, at home and away from other children. A cold may be the first sign of whooping cough or it may mark the beginning of any one of several infectious diseases.

Whooping cough is spread only through contact with the fresh secretions of the nose and mouth of another person suffering with the disease.

The prevention of whooping cough consists in keeping all children with colds away from other children. This is a matter solely within the control of parents. Take precautions with your child and insist on your neighbor doing likewise. It is a State law that you report all cases of whooping cough to the health officer.

A vaccine has been developed; while it seems to help little in preventing the disease, it is of considerable value in reducing the severity of the disease.

Don't trifle with whooping cough but give it expert care.

NEW GERMAN CHANCELLOR APPOINTED

The game of basketball to be played tonight between the National guard team representing Eugene and Roseburg is expected to be a thrilling contest. In the last five years Roseburg has won only two games from the Eugene guards, but this year have the best team which has represented the guard organization and is expected to make a fine showing. Eugene on the other hand has been cleaning up everything in sight. The guardsmen defeated all of the city teams and tied the University team.

The Roseburg players have been practicing hard under the coaching of Dr. G. C. Finlay, who turned out some of the best high school teams Roseburg ever had and who is recognized as an athletic coach of great ability. The local team is made up of experienced players, who should hold their own against the Eugene quintette.

Hugh Whipple, a former high school star, and a member of the O. A. C. Freshman team last year, is playing center. Wally Kapp and Phil Singleton, both well known high school players, hold down places at forward and Charlie Thurston and George Singleton have been working out a guard.

B. E. Larson, a letterman with Linville College, and an instructor in the local high school, and coach of last year's team, is also a member of the squad, as well as Rusty Irwin, center on the high school team last year. The other members of the squad include Earl Patterson, Don Helliwell and Bus Wescott.

FARM NEWS

SQUIRREL POISON WORK SAVES FARMERS BIG SUM.

Farmers of Oregon saved more than 179 thousand dollars on the cost of ground squirrel poison in the last six years, reports Ira N. Gabrielson of the federal biological survey cooperating with the state college extension service.

This does not consider the value of crops saved by the cooperative control work, estimated conservatively at two million dollars. State funds appropriated for rodent control work of all kinds for the period was $12,744.

A total of 512,603 pounds of poisoned grain was distributed by county agents, and 436,490 acres of government lands adjoining cultivated areas were poisoned by the biological survey to protect the cultivated fields from squirrel damage.

"Five species of ground squirrels are found in Oregon," says Mr. Gabrielson," all of which are destructive to agriculture. In addition to these is the silver grey squirrel that is protected by law, but nevertheless inflicts heavy losses to nut growers of the Willamette valley.

The program of needed work includes for the immediate future the poisoning of a million additional acres of government lands adjoining cultivated fields. Continuous inroads are made upon farm crops by ground squirrels raised on the public lands. In many districts permanent relief cannot be obtained by the rancher until this menace is removed.

A formula for tangle-foot — not the moonshine variety—for trapping and holding the tussock moth, as found satisfactory in Oregon by the experiment station, is made of one gallon of castor oil and 16 pounds of resin. They are gently heated till the resin is melted. If too thick, more oil is added. Even simple bands of loose cotton fastened about the trunk of trees have prevented the ascent of various insects.

FARM REMINDERS

Rhubarb roots that were dug and frozen for forcing are placed on a thin layer of soil in a dark basement or shed where the temperature ranges from 45 to 60 degrees. They are then covered with an inch or two of soil, well sprinkled with water and allowed to bear stalks. With occasional sprinklings the stalks are market size—10 to 14 inches—in about 4 weeks. They are of excellent quality and bring good prices, says the experiment station.

If the fruiting wood of the grape vine tends to get too far from the trunk, the suckers or water sprouts may be converted into strong bearing wood for the following year by cutting them back to one or two buds. By thus looking forward a year in pruning the location of the bearing area may be kept in control, according to experiment station reports.

Pruning and training loganberry vines though usually associated are in fact two distinct operations in Oregon plantings, says the experiment station. The pruning removes portions of the vine while training disposes of the parts of the vine left for bearing, on the trellis or other support. Both systems vary in Oregon according to the requirements, personal preference, varieties, planting system and methods of cultivation.

Feeding the Oregon laying flock for economical egg production is most profitable when based on the hen's appetites rather than on rules, the experiment station finds. The best poultry feed is the one that supplies most economically the necessary food elements.

Crop rotation might lessen the drain on soil fertility even in semiarid districts of Oregon, the experiment station says, particularly an organic matter and nitrogen. Suitable rotations including legumes or nitrogen-gathering crops, may increase and maintain soil fertility.

One Wife on Approval

by VIOLET DARE

Author of "Luxury of Love," "The Husband Tamer" etc.

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED

CYNTHIA AND JIM LELAND return from their honeymoon to his home town, where his mother promptly begins to try to make Cynthia over. She has accepted the girl merely on approval. Cynthia finds it difficult to get along with her sister-in-law,

LOUELLA GRAY, also, but likes her brother-in-law, Stanley. She meets

NOEL GARDNER while her husband is out of town on business partly concerned with some bad investments that his mother has made.

TODAY'S INSTALMENT

XV—THE ATWATERS' DINNER PARTY

BACK in her own home again, Cynthia wandered about aimlessly. She was far too angry at her mother-in-law to sit down and be quiet. Over and over she told herself that Madame Leland had had no right to be so unjust; it was unreasonable to suppose that a newcomer in the family, like Cynthia, would know just what matters were to be told the rest of the family and which ones were not.

VIOLET DARE

"How could I know that Louella and Stanley weren't to know that she'd made those bad investments; she's always telling me how wonderful Louella is—how could I suspect that she didn't tell her everything?" Cynthia demanded of herself. If only Jim were home! If only he hadn't gone away, or had taken her with him, she wouldn't have told Stanley that Madame Leland had made the investments! She went over and over the ground quite uselessly.

She dressed with care for the Atwaters' dinner that evening, although she would not admit even to herself that she was doing it because Noel Gardner was to be there. It didn't seem exactly right that when she had been married so short a time she should take so keen an interest in a man other than her husband.

And yet he had been so nice! And the other men whom she had met in this town had been so uninteresting!

Her frock was one of her prettiest ones, a pale blue chiffon embroidered in crystal beads, made to emphasize a new silhouette that had only recently been approved by the Parisian designers. It clung to her slender form almost as tightly as a Princess model, and although rather extreme, was so well suited to her demure beauty that it escaped being too daring in effect.

Resolutely she got out the make-up box that she had ignored since her marriage, because Jim didn't like it. She had assured him that she used make-up because she loved to put it on, but he had frowned and told her that as long as she didn't need it, he considered her use of rouge and mascaro nothing short of utter folly.

She applied it carefully now. Just a hint of rouge on her cheekbones, blue powder on her eyelids, mascaro for her eyelashes but none for her brows, because they were dark enough and it made them look stiff and hard. A touch of rouge on her lips, not enough to deepen their pale pink tint, but just enough to outline them more definitely. A suggestion of blue powder in the tiny cleft in her chin; pale tan powder over all, softening, blending, making it all look natural.

She slipped into her frock, let Frances adjust it and clasp the few fastenings; gathered up her blue velvet evening cloak and folded its chinchilla collar about her throat. Ten minutes afterwards she was entering the Atwaters' drawing-room, just a few moments later than anyone else, realizing that Noel Gardner's quizzical eyes were studying her, that half the men in the room, in fact, were regarding her with unalloyed approval.

Her brother-in-law took her into dinner, but Noel Gardner sat on her left, and monopolized her through the first two courses without regard for Stanley's protests. At last he turned reluctantly to his dinner partner, and Stanley claimed Cynthia's attention.

"You're neglecting me shamefully," he protested.

"Of course I am; you deserve to be neglected," she told him haughtily. "You got me into the most dreadful trouble; you should have told me last night that Madame Leland doesn't discuss her business affairs with any of the family but Jim."

"I supposed you knew that; when you mentioned the investments she made while you and he were honeymooning I took it for granted that she was willing to let the rest of us know about them."

"Well, she wasn't. She scolded me dreadfully this afternoon, and I refused to stay with her till Jim comes back, and went home. I'm furious with you, Stanley."

"Oh, I'm so sorry, child." He laid

"I'm so sorry, child!"

one hand lightly on hers for an instant. "I wouldn't have got you into trouble with the duchess for anything. I merely mentioned what you'd said to Louella when you got home—"

"Yes, and of course she went straight to her mother. It was terrible! I don't know what Jim will say to me. What was the stock she bought, anyway?"

"Oh, she bought some shares in a new real estate development that's being backed by several men here in town, including your friend Noel Gardner, who's sitting next you. Then the bottom fell out of the whole thing, as it was bound to, and she got caught; will lose a pretty piece of money on the whole thing. I'd have told her not to take 'em if she'd consulted me in the first place, but she thinks nobody but Jim knows anything," he concluded moodily.

Noel Gardner—and he'd been so kind!

"Maybe he could help me," Cynthia thought to herself. "Maybe he'd buy back those shares from her, and let me buy them from him. I'll ask him if I can't see him tomorrow at his office about it."

And she turned to Gardner with an eager little smile. Louella from her place across the table, noted it, and drew her eyebrows together disapprovingly.

A New Acquaintance.

WRESTLER'S WIFE GETS ALL CREDIT

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

CHICAGO, Jan. 16—Wayne "Big" Munn, world's heavyweight wrestling champion, who weighs approximately an eighth of a ton owes his prized title to the wise counsel of his four feet two inches tall wife.

The conqueror of Ed (Strangler) Lewis today told how an indomitable desire to play instead of work, took him from oil selling in Sioux City, Iowa, to professional athletics—after he had been urged by his wife to make the leap. He gives her entire credit for the decision in choosing an athletic instead of a business career that landed him into the championship.

GOLF CHAMPS ARE LOOKING TO LAURELS

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

NEW YORK, Jan. 16.The old maxim "Uneasy is the head that wears a crown", fits neatly into the 1925 golf picture with holders of the six major championshipsopen amateur and women's titles of Great Britain and America—facing stirring fights to retain their laurels.

Bobby Jones who won the national amateur title last year, appears the most likely to keep his honors, when the amateur clan gathers at Pittsburgh.

Walter Hagen will bid again for the British open title but though the odds will be against him, he will start the tournament as a favorite on the strength of his record of having won the championship twice in three years. He will be reinforced possibly by Bobby Cruikshank, Gene Sarazen, Jim Barnes and Johnny Farrel.

Cyril Walker, who startled the golf world by capturing the American open crown at Detroit last year, is now favored to repeat at Worcester, Mass.

British amateur laurels probably will be safe from American attack this year, but Ernest Holderness, who won the Anglo championship for the second time in 1924, has many formidable foes at home.

SERIOUS LUNG TROUBLE STARTS WITH COUGHING

Physicians warn against neglecting coughs and colds and tell of the serious lung complications that may result. Leading physicians now prescribe BALSAMEA for all bronchial affections. Well known Dr. Benj. F. Crabtree, Anderson, Mo., writes: "I use it exclusively for my practice and my family. It is quick, sure and safe in its action like nothing else."

Toward the end of the influenza epidemic a government physician noticed that a tribe of Indians in Nevada, by the use of oils from a native plant were immune from the ravages of influenza. He used these oils among his white patients and then in a hospital overflowing with "death" cases. News of the results swept the world and for some time it was not possible to supply the demand.

BALSAMEA combines these pure vegetable oils in a pleasant syrup. It gives miraculous results in four ways: 1. It soothes the inflamed membranes and relieves irritation. 2. It increases secretion of mucous and permits easy expectoration. 3. It stimulates pores of the skin in throwing off body poisons and 4. It strikes at the cause, quickly checking germ action.

Do not confuse it with ordinary balsam cough syrups that are only soothing syrups and do not go to the base of the trouble. Unlike other cough remedies BALSAMEA is free from coal tar and other harmful narcotics. Pleasant to take and absolutely safe to give to children.

Be sure you get BAL-SA-ME-A with the picture of the Indian on the package. Guaranteed to relieve any cough, no matter from what cause, or your money back. All druggists sell BALSAMEA.

In Roseburg buy it from Chapman's Drug Store.
