GRAND JURY PROBE OF MURDER STARTS

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore., Jan. 17—Grand jury investigation into the slaying of Oscar Erickson in the robbery of a card game here early on the morning of January 4, started this morning. With four of the five reputed outlaws in custody, District Attorney Ganong believes that the grand jury probe will be completed within a few days and he will then seek immediate trials for the men now in custody. John Taylor who has made a complete confession of the robbery plot, told newspapermen this morning that he will bare the entire story to the grand jurors and will then plead guilty to whatever charge the jurors file against him. Belief prevails here that Taylor will not be indicted for first-degree murder by reason of the fact that he confessed the entire crime and its tragic ending and aided authorities in tracing down others connected with it.

NEWSBOY SUING LAWYER FOR $1

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

DENVER, Colo., Jan. 17—Harry Daridow, a lusty lunged 14-year-old newsboy filed suit in district court here yesterday against Walter J. Bates, an attorney.

In his petition the newsie asks the court to award him one dollar, which he claims the attorney owes him for "papers bought on time," during last November and December.

The paper vendor declared he knew Bates could afford to pay the amount because "when he presented his bill the lawyer was sitting in a swivel chair smoking a fat and expensive cigar."

U. OF O. BASKET SHOOTERS VICTORS

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

EUGENE, Ore., Jan. 17.—Scoring at will, the University of Oregon basketball team took the Pacific University of Forest Grove down to a 48 to 15 drubbing on the local floor last night. It was not until the latter part of the first half that the visitors were able to score at all, the Oregon playing was so fast and sure.

Okerberg, rangy center for Oregon, was high point man of the game with 22 markers.

Westergren, speedy little guard, was the outstanding floor man.

The game boosted Oregon's spirit considerably, as Pacific was touted as having a surprise in store.

JOE MADDOCK NOT TO COACH U. OF O.

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

EUGENE, Ore., Jan. 17—Joe Maddock, head coach of football at the University of Oregon during the past season, tendered his resignation to the University authorities yesterday. Pressure of business interests were ascribed as the reason for his resignation.

No successor has been hinted by the University officials.

Regret was expressed by the athletic directors of the University on receipt of the resignation of Mr. Maddock.

"He was an amiable gentleman and a fine coach," declared Virgil Earl, director of athletics.

The resignation followed the decision of the University officials to have the football coaching done on the year-round plan, rather than the present system, Mr. Maddock, who is at the present time in Idaho Falls, Idaho, where he is engaged in business, wired that he could not consider the full time plan.

"Sorry, but cannot consider all year round position at Oregon. Would be too great sacrifice to change my plans at this time. Do not consider me for re-election on the year-round plan."

The University, according to Dean Colin V. Dyment, requires a full time coach, one who can handle two major sports and lend assistance in the physical department when he is not occupied with the busy season.

FOOTBALL COACH GETS AN OVATION

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 17—Elmer C. Henderson, who two days ago resigned his position as head football coach at the University of Southern California following a football coach war in which he was target for considerable criticism yesterday was given a farewell demonstration as great as any accorded him in the days when Henderson stock was well above par.

For a full five minutes at Chapel exercises, Trojan students who packed the assembly room rose and cheered the man who came to U. S. C. in 1919 and attained a measure of success approximated by no other coach in the history of the institution.

The occasion was Henderson's last official act as coach of the Trojan football team—the presentation to members of the team of sweaters awarded them by the athletic commission. Before presenting the sweaters, Henderson gave a short address praising the work of the squad individually and as a team.

CANON WM. BLISS IS CRITICALLY ILL

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—The condition of Canon William H. Bliss of Seattle, Wash., who is in St. Luke's hospital suffering from heart disease, remained critical today. The patient became weaker during the night, his physician said.

Canon Bliss was taken to the hospital upon his return from Europe on December 21.

Sportographs

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—Jack Delaney, Bridgeport, Conn., middleweight, rudely halted the meteoric career of Tiger Flowers, Atlanta negro when he knocked him out in the second round of a 12 round match here last night. The match ended after 43 seconds of fighting in the second round when Delaney crashed through with a right uppercut that bowled Flowers over.

The fight was one-punch affair except for a brief skirmish immediately preceding the final knockout.

The University of California, three time winner of the intercollegiate AAAA track and field title, would like to stage this blue ribbon event in its new stadium at Berkeley this year or next. But the fact that the bulk of the ICAAAA membership lies in the east is likely to mitigate against any prospect of the event going to the far west, as the expense of transcontinental traveling would be prohibitive for many institutions.

Benny Leonard retired from the prize ring with a fortune estimated at well above $500,000, second only to Jack Dempsey among the well to do pugilists. The ring has not furnished the entire amount but has, however, given him the prestige which makes him a drawing card for theatres.

Babe Ruth, once sport of the sport pages and still a leader while baseball holds sway, has slid into New York to arrange for his annual visit to Hot Springs to boil out.

Robert W. Watt, chairman of the Intercollegiate Rowing Association and secretary of the Poughkeepsie Regatta Board of Stewards, today notified Darwin Meisenest, graduate manager of the University of Washington that the Norsemen had been awarded two permanent trophies for winning the 1923 and 1924 championships. The victorious crews are to be given certificates.

Princess Tsianina will appear in the artistic costume of her race, wearing a dress of beaded buckskin, moccasins, and beaded head band. Hear her on Jan. 26, at the Conservatory.

One Wife on Approval

by VIOLET DARE

Author of "Luxury of Love," "The Husband Parner," etc.

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED

CYNTHIA AND JIM LELAND return from their honeymoon to his home town, where his mother promptly begins to try to make Cynthia over. She has accepted the girl merely on approval. Cynthia finds it difficult to get along with her sister-in-law.

LOUELLA GRAY, also, but likes her brother-in-law, Stanley. She meets

NOEL GARDNER while her husband is out of town on business partly concerned with some bad investments that his mother has made.

TODAY'S INSTALMENT

XVI—A NEW ACQUAINTANCE

CYNTHIA could not help feeling, as she entered the drawing-room with the other women, that there was hostility toward her in the air. Louella withdrew at once to the Chesterfield near the fire and entered into conversation with the only other woman present whom Cynthia knew at all well, Mrs. Atwater busied herself with one of the guests who was always asked to sing, always protested that she couldn't, and finally sang until everyone wished that she would strangle to death.

VIOLET DARE

Cynthia glanced about aimlessly, and finally sat down near a table on which were several of the large books of reproductions of famous paintings which women like Mrs. Atwater invariably place on their drawing tables. She was affecting interest in the Sistine Madonna when a voice at her elbow said: "Hello, Mrs. Leland—you don't know me, but I'm Cecile Malcolm; you and I missed each other in the general introduction. And this is Helena Jordan—you'll love her, my dear."

Cynthia, grateful for the friendly overture, held out her hand eagerly. "Oh, I'm so glad to meet you," she exclaimed.

"Well, I'm glad to meet you, too; why we haven't run into each other before this I don't see, with all these parties that have been given for you since you arrived. But I've been away, and busy, and all that. I wonder—don't you want to come into the conservatory? It's so much pleasanter in there than here, especially as that Logan woman is going to sing."

Cynthia followed her into the conservatory, and sat down on a wide wicker couch opposite the door. Her new friend, sitting just out of range of it, took a cigarette case from the little ostrich feather bag that dangled from her wrist, offered Cynthia a cigarette, and took one herself. Mrs. Jordan had already begun to smoke.

"You'll have to smoke, my dear, to keep your spirits up at this party. Though I noticed that you found it gay enough—you sat next Noel Gardner, you lucky thing!"

"And next Stanley," murmured Helena Jordan, lazily.

"Oh, my dear, remember that he's her brother-in-law—don't expect her to be as thrilled over that as you'd have been," chirped Cecile Malcolm, laughing. Then to Cynthia: "Helena has a terrible crush on Stanley—probably you know it, though? Well, she has, as the whole town is aware. Madame Leland would give her poisoned green if it could be done on the sly. Now tell me, do you play golf? Heaven grant that you do! That's fine—why not come out to the Country Club tomorrow and have a round with me? My game's not so bad, but I'm sure that yours is much better. I can tell by looking at you that you do everything well."

Cynthia told herself that this was just idle flattery, and tried not to show that she was pleased. She had been so lonely since settling in her new home that it was a delight to find anyone who was inclined to be friendly.

"I haven't played for ages," she told Cecile. "I'd love to begin again."

"Then that's a go. Meet me at the club for luncheon, won't you? Tell me, do you know Noel Gardner well?"

"No—do you?" asked Cynthia.

"Do I? My dear child, I'm one of the few women in this town who dares admit that she's been an intimate friend of his. I don't know just what our status is at present; haven't had a long talk with the dear thing since he came home. When he went away relations between us were somewhat strained—through no fault of mine, however. Oh, well—you'll hear all the details before long, because the town talked so hard about us before he went away that it's bound to talk again now that he's home."

She lighted a fresh cigarette from the butt of the old one, tossed the latter into a clump of ferns that grew at the edge of a little pool, and glancing up, nodded affably. Cynthia, turning, looked to see to whom she had spoken, and saw Noel Gardner standing before her.

"I'm Cecile Malcolm."

"There's a painting in the drawing-room that I'd like you to see," he said to Cynthia, after greeting them both. "Won't you come with me and look at it?"

She rose, wondering at the rather abrupt invitation, and sauntered back into the room with him. She realized that several of the women were staring at her, and laid their attention to her frock, which was quite the prettiest one present. When they reached the picture she barely looked at it, but turned to Gardner.

"While there's a chance for me to ask you without being overheard—will you let me see you sometime tomorrow—on business? It's very important." She spoke in such low tones that even Louella, who sat nearby, could not overhear.

"Yes, certainly." He hesitated a moment, evidently recalling his engagements for the following day. "How about coming to my office at eleven? It's in the Winsted Building—do you know where that is?"

She nodded, and smiled up at him gratefully.

"I'll be there promptly," she told him. "It's awfully good of you to see me, when you'll be so busy, after being away for so long."

He smiled also. "It could never be good of me to see you," he replied. "When I'd rather do that than anything else in the world."

BOURGES, France, Jan. 17.—Pursued by a hunter, a wild boar dashed into a private house in the village of Grand Mallery, near here, and made his way into a bedroom, where an invalid had been lying for months.

The sick man shrieked for help, then arose and jumped out of the window. The wild boar was finally killed. The invalid has returned to work.
