JOHN BULL SAYS HE'S TOO LIBERAL

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

LONDON, Feb. 9.—John Bull through the editorial columns of this morning's papers is proclaimed a very generous fellow for the way he has offered to treat France with reference to her war debt. Here and there the writers are even of the opinion that he has been too generous at the expense of his own people.

A British note to France published today, declines to agree than France's payments should be dependent upon Germany's full payment of the Dawes plan annuities, declares that Great Britain is willing to accept fixed annual payments irrespective of the Dawes proceeds, and makes known that Great Britain will devote any surplus beyond the requirements of meeting her American indebtedness to diminish the burden of her allies.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—The conciliatory tone of the debt question is welcomed by French commentators but its terms cause considerable doubt, not to say misgivings. At the same time it is generally admitted by the writers that misgivings may disappear in the course of the forthcoming negotiations. Le Matin observes that "the principle embodied in the note is not entirely confirmable to the views of the French parliament and government.

One Wife on Approval

by VIOLET DARE

AUTHOR OF "Luxury of Love," "The Husband Parade," etc.

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED

CYNTHIA LELAND'S husband, Jim, has gone to Honolulu shortly after their marriage, following a misunderstanding with his wife, and has taken his mother with him, leaving Cynthia to face the disapproval of her sister-in-law,

LOUELLA, and all her world. Cynthia turns to

CECILE MALCOLM, leader of the town's gayest set, and accepts the friendship of NOEL GARDNER, the town's black sheep, going with them to a mid-winter house party at Cecile's mountain cabin.

TODAY'S INSTALMENT

XXXV—A MATTER OF BUSINESS

ONE of Noel Gardner's predictions was a successful one; it was only a day or two until Cynthia once more could take her place in the world. The fact that she had but little desire to do so did not keep her friends and relatives from insisting on entertaining for her. Jim's second sister, who had but recently returned from abroad, made things even more complicated than they had been before.

VIOLET DARE

She was dressing for the tea that Louella had threatened to give when Noel Gardner called her up. She had not seen him since the day on which he had advised her to try to patch things up with Jim, although each morning he had sent her flowers and had asked for her over the telephone.

She hesitated a moment when he asked if he might see her that day.

"It's most important," he urged. "I wouldn't ask you if it weren't."

"I could come in to your office," she told him. "Would that do?" She had felt that he rebuffed her at their last meeting, and had decided to be cool and polite in future—so far as it was possible to a man who had risked his life to save her own.

"Very well; I'll be in all day," he answered. If he was disappointed at not seeing her at home he gave no sign of it.

She stopped at his office on the way to Louella's.

"I want to ask you if you'll sell that stock you had me buy from your mother-in-law for you," he began, as soon as she had seated herself beside his desk.

"Why—I hadn't thought of selling it," she answered slowly.

"I realize that. But if you would I'll be glad to buy it of you—that is, if you don't mind taking part of the money now and taking my note for the rest."

"Do you want to buy it because you think I need the money, or because you want the stock?" she asked him bluntly.

He did not answer at once, and she knew that he was trying to plan a reply that would hide the truth from her.

"Well, I've always hoped to control all the stock in the company at some time, and the only way to do that is to buy it back gradually," he answered finally. "Of course, I'd like to own yours."

"Noel, are you telling me all the truth?" she asked. "Do you really want that stock?"

"You speak as if it was impossible to believe that the stock was anything that anyone would want," he told her, laughing. "Of course I want it. I'm sorry not to pay you in full at once for it, but you won't have to wait long."

He watched her closely as she sat without speaking for a moment, trying to decide what to do. She could not explain even to herself her hesitancy over selling the stock. She had not wanted it in the first place, had bought it only so that her mother-in-law would stop fussing over having bought it. Yet now she felt that she must not grant his request and let him buy it back.

She rose at length, still undecided.

"Let me wait until tomorrow to decide, won't you?" she asked. "I can't seem to make up my mind just now."

"Well—of course I'm eager to have the thing settled, but if you insist on waiting—"

"Oh, don't think me unreasonable but somehow I can't say that I'll let you have it now," she interrupted. "I'll phone you the minute I decide what to do."

She walked to Louella's, despite the fact that she still did not feel strong. She could not escape from the feeling that there was something she must know before she decided about selling the stock that Noel wanted.

Louella's tea was exactly like so many others that she had attended that she was not at all interested. It was only when Stanley sauntered in, nodded to his wife, and sat down beside Cynthia that the affair became interesting. For his first words, after he had greeted her, concerned the matter that was on her mind.

"How do you feel now about that stock you had Gardner buy back from Madame Leland and sell you?" he asked. "Oh, the secret's leaked out—don't look so surprised. But you're not such a financier as you'd supposed, are you?"

"Let me wait to decide."

She stifled her first impulse, which was to ask him what he meant, and pretended that she knew.

"Perhaps it looks different to you than it does to me, Stanley," she said.

"Perhaps—but with that whole sub-division in the fix it's in now, with the land right next it sold for factories, I'm glad I don't own it," he replied. "Gardner thought it was going to be the smartest residential district in town—and now he'll be cleaned out, for he's put every cent he's got into it. Hope it doesn't hit you awfully hard."

"Oh, not at all," Cynthia retorted airily. So that was Noel's reason for wanting her to sell—he thought he could save her money for her, somehow, even though he lost all his! "I wonder if Louella would mind if I ran away now; I'm still half an invalid."

Louella excused her, and she made her way to the street. Half a block from Noel's office she dismissed the car.

The office had been closed for the day. Noel was sitting at his desk, his head in his hands. He looked up suddenly as she appeared in the doorway.

"I've decided about that stock, Noel," she said quietly. "May I come in and tell you what I'm going to do?"

RALLY TOMORROW NIGHT

Tomorrow evening at the armory at 7:30 sharp the boy scouts of Roseburg will stage a rally. This will be conducted on a competitive basis, the two troops of Roseburg taking part. Though termed a "rally" by scouts, it is to the public an exhibition of scout activities. It is free. The program is planned as follows: Troop stunts, horse and rider contest (game), semaphore signalling, one mile run at scouts' pace (fifty paces running and fifty walking), knot tying relay, fire by friction, first aid relay, wall scaling and if time permits a basketball game. In addition to this very interesting program the Kiwanis Kazoo Komic Koncert Kompany, made up of the west's most talented musicians, will render several musical numbers some time during the course of the evening. Keep tomorrow evening in reserve and come out to this rally.

KONCERT KOMPANY APPEAR

The Kiwanis Kazoo Komic Koncert Kompany, in the full regalia will appear in public concert tomorrow evening in the boy scout rally.

The members of this wonder organization are all local men and members of the Kiwanis club here. It is agreed by all who have had the rare treat of hearing these men play that "musically speaking" they are in a class by themselves.

It is understood that they will appear in costumes, which in this day and age are in the grand opera class.

Since this entertainment is free to the public you will certainly get your "money's worth."

DOUGLAS LIKELY STILL 2ND IN DISTRICT FARMS

EUGENE, Ore., Feb. 6.—More than 11,000 farms are listed in Lane, Jackson, Coos, Josephine and Douglas counties, according to the figures obtained for the federal farm census which was completed today in this district, according to the report of Ralph P. Laird, director. No exact figures are given out for publication as all information is held confidential for the census bureau where district and county averages only will be compiled for general distribution.

In 1920 the census figures showed the following farms for the five counties in this district: Lane, 3279; Coos, 1178; Douglas, 2275; Josephine, 727; Jackson, 1720. The ratio of increase has been about the same in each county, Mr. Laird said.

The increase in number of farms is due to irrigation, drainage, clearing and the cutting of larger farms in smaller divisions, the director gives the opinion.
