

Permanent roads are a good investment—not an expense

-and- No Place to Go!

We find ourselves, almost without realizing it, a nation on wheels.

We drive or ride in more than 17,000,000 motor vehicles.

We pack the paved highways coming in and out of town. We over-run even so-called remote regions. And we are pounding to pieces all but permanent roads.

This year probably 4,000,000 new cars will be on the road. Compared to this increase, the mileage of new permanent roads will be insignificant.

We don't want to be a nation on wheels, with no place to go.

The answer is, build more, and where necessary, wider concrete roads—and start building them now.

Not in a long time have general conditions been so favorable for carrying on such public works as permanent highway building.

Your highway authorities are ready to carry on their share of this great public work. But they must have your support.

Tell them you are ready to invest in more Concrete Highways, now.

EARTH CLOSES IN ON REMAINS OF CAVE VICTIM

for a shaft. I was certain that we would locate Collins at a 65 foot level and we located a shaft so as to miss him about ten feet.

"We started the shaft Thursday a week ago at about 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

"I feel that the shaft was the best one of any other little jobs I ever saw. I don't believe another set of men in the United States could have done any quicker work.

As we went deeper what seemed to be a slip was more frequent.

"When the shaft reached about 45 feet we hit a bunch of muck and loose boulders. At 52 feet loose material was falling out so fast that I began to have fears of the shaft pulling in two.

We decided to leave the shaft and drift from the tunnel side of the shaft to a crevice.

"Every man working was given to understand that we thought Floyd Collins was alive. After driving this heading about ten feet we went on through the shell and at 12 or 15 feet when we broke through the limestone ledge, we came out blank into the original cavern. This was just below the slide six or eight feet above Collins.

"To take the man from his present position would probably result in the death of one or more of the rescue party. We were determined either to bring Floyd Collins out of there, or to prove to the world that Floyd Collins was in there and that it was not a hoax. I feel that we have definitely established that fact."

CAVE CITY, Ky., Feb. 18.—Sand Cave hill torn open in the struggle to rescue Floyd Collins from the grip of an underground trap was the closing chapter today upon his body, without human assistance. Unable to release him from the clutch of nature, the volunteers who fought to save him joined his family in brief and simple funeral services at the top of the rescue shaft and six of his friends fulfilled the legal formalities by announcing his identity and accidental death.

The event with which it was planned to seal the boulders over his rocky grave did not come and the sargines of the rescue shaft and its lateral tunnel indicated nature's intention to seal him up forever.

The mud and rocks, held back for a few days by heavy timbers in the rescue shaft, were settling back upon him.

Unwilling that the brave miners should risk their lives to recover his body, Lee Collins, his aged father agreed to leave him where he lay. A prayer, a few hymns and the ritual for the dead finished the story, while mourners, wearing white and "still" pictures by the score were snatched.

The best efforts of the state of Kentucky, scores of unselfish workers, and the sympathy and prayers of thousands had failed. Dr. William Harbitt of Chicago, the only physician to see him in his present sixty foot grave, announced he had been searched at least three days too late.
