TELEGRAPH SCHOOL GETS RECOGNITION

The Roseburg Telegraph Institute has received recognition from one of the larger telegraph and cable companies of the country, and students graduating from the classes of the local school, with the recommendation of the management, are assured of positions as commercial operators.

E. K. McLendon, who is conducting the school received a letter this morning containing a number of application blanks, which the superintendent of the company states, "we would be glad to have your students fill out and forward to us, together with your recommendation as to their ability, when they are ready for positions as operators."

Mr. McLendon states that the first class will graduate during the month of April, and that the second class, which is now being started, will graduate during the latter part of the summer. The first class consists of ten student operators.

The school conducted here is one of the most modernly equipped on the coast, and the course of instruction is very thorough and complete.

Student obtaining positions as operators are required to be able to send at least 25 words per minute and receive the same amount direct on the typewriter.

GOOD PROGRESS IS MADE IN EGG PRODUCTION

Poultry Industry Showing Greater Advances Than Any Other.

BUSINESS IS PAYING

A. G. Lunn, Authority at O. A. C., Says That Poultry Keeping Gives Income.

(The following on "Specialized Poultry Farming," is the broadcasted radio talk of a few weeks ago by A. G. Lunn, professor of poultry husbandry of the Oregon Agricultural College:)

Poultry farming as a specialized business is different from farm poultry or the keeping of poultry as a branch of general farming. That old saying about having all of one's eggs in one basket is literally true when applied to specialized poultry farming. It is seldom that all the crops on the general farm fail. Climatic conditions, markets and other factors may affect some of them. Others will probably carry the burden. One crop farming means that the entire income burden rests upon the ability of the operator to make that particular specialty pay.

Poultry keeping is a branch of farming, and, like any other branch, when set off by itself as a specialized business, requires special knowledge. I am of the opinion that poultrymen may be made, not necessarily grown. Farm surveys have shown that there are successful poultry keepers who started with little or no farm training and with no previous poultry experience. Records also show failures in the same class of people. The human element is one of the greatest factors in successful poultry keeping. While there are many failures in the poultry business, there is a greater number of successes. Specialized poultry farming has developed rapidly during the last few years throughout the entire country, and particularly in the northwest. There is scarcely a town in western Oregon that doesn't have its poultry farm, and in several sections it is one of the principal farming activities.

During the last few weeks I have received letters from a great many people asking for information and advices as to the best way to start and methods to use in poultry keeping. Why the interest at this time I am unable to say, unless perhaps the relative high prices of eggs during the winter are having their effect. At any rate it is to those interested in starting in the poultry business that I want to speak to for the few minutes allowed me.

There are three very important factors to be considered in this keeping of fowls as a specialized business: The man, the required capital, and the stock.

Of the man much could be said. In spite of the fact that every clerk, school teacher and clergyman looks forward to the day when he can give up his arduous tasks and retire to poultry farming, it is a business requiring a business head and plenty of energy. It is not hard work if you call getting up at four or five in the morning and a couple of times during the night to look at the brooders, easy. No, it is not hard work, but it is steady work and it is the ability of the poultryman to look after details; to do things when they should be done; to foresee trouble—in fact to be ever on the job, that makes for successful poultry keeping. As one man will stand out as a success in any line of business, so will one man be an outstanding success in poultry keeping. So much depends upon the man that I have many times recommended an enthusiast to go and work on a poultry farm for a year before starting for himself, that he might determine hits fitness for work before investing his own capital.

Capital and the division of that capital is the second important step to consider. Farm surveys have shown that poultry keeping pays a larger labor income on a smaller capital investment than other branches of agriculture. The poultry keeper is so often handicapped through lack of sufficient capital. So often he has all he can raise tied up in his business in such a way that should unforeseen trouble such as sickness in the flock, hatching, brooding or rearing troubles come upon him, he is forced out of business through no real fault of his own.

Farm surveys have shown that on the average there is an investment of ten dollars per head for each fowl kept. Assuming then that the one man (which includes his family) poultry farm will have from 800 to 1000 fowls, the capital necessary will be from eight to ten thousand dollars. This sounds like a lot of money to invest in chickens, but it is less than is invested in other lines of agriculture on the average. About 75 per cent of the capital is invested in real estate which includes not only land but all buildings, fences, etc., including residence. The stock represents from 15 to 20 per cent of the capital investment. The remaining 5 to 10 per cent is divided between equipment, feed and cash.

Cheap land is often as poor an investment for poultry keeping as expensive land. The recommendation of state and county agricultural economic conferences held during the past year is that not less than a ten acre tract of tillable land be provided for a 1000 hen farm, and not less than twenty acres of uncleared land. Small acreage of expensive land has been the downfall of many poultry keepers. Ground contamination is one of the greatest problems of the industry. Good roads and transportation facilities will allow one to get out from the centers to places where double the amount of land may be had for the same capital investment. While it is a good plan to start in a small way and develop the plant as experience is gained, sufficient land should be obtained for future development, or a location where additional land can be had when desired.

The third important factor in successful poultry farming is the stock. The problem of egg production will be taken up more in detail next week, but it should be emphasized here. In poultry products the Pacific coast states produce more than they consume. The surplus is sold elsewhere, principally on eastern markets. WE ARE COMPETING WITH EASTERN PRODUCTS WITH OUR MARKET AT THEIR DOOR. It is necessary that we produce eggs especially of high quality in order to meet this competition. Not only must quality be considered but quantity as well, if we are to maintain a profit producing business. Can this be done, Yes, we are doing it. No where in the United States has such rapid progress been made in increasing the egg production of the hen as on the Pacific coast and especially in the northwest. Some of the greatest laying strains in the world have been produced right at our doors. But a few years ago the two hundred egg hen was a myth. Today we have the 200 egg flock average and the 300 egg individual. High production of large eggs enables us to meet competition. I am convinced that our breeders will continue to lead in the production of viorous, high producing fowls. Because of our mild winter it is the practice to give the breeding stock access to yards on free range throughout the winter. We can grow fresh, succulent green feed throughout the year. Summers are cool and the young growing stock has steady development, all of which works toward the building up and maintaining of vigor and vitality.

The poultry farmer should therefore be careful in the purchase of his stock. The saving of two or three cents per chick when buying new stock may mean the losing of considerable income when the fowls mature. An extra egg or two will pay the additional cost of a better chick.

To the prospective poultryman I would recommend that you proceed slowly. Be sure that you have a liking for the business. That your enthusiasm has more of a foundation than merely considering it as a money making proposition. That you first obtain experience by working on a successful poultry farm or study carefully the methods of those who have made a success of the business. That you have sufficient capital and invest it carefully. Last, but of great importance, start with well bred, vigorous stock. It is so easy to be carried away by glowing advertisements, while right at our doors is being produced the best stock in the country.

The poultry department of the Oregon Agricultural college will gladly help you with your problems. Circulars on housing, feeding, rearing, etc., are sent out free to those desiring them. Simply address the college and let us know how we can help you.

PROHI DRIVE MAY CLOSE ALL CAFES

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

NEW YORK, Mar. 7.—United States District Attorney Buckner has appealed to the public for aid in his campaign against the sale of liquor along Broadway in much the same way that District Attorney Banton of New York county enlisted the public's aid in his movement to suppress salacious plays in Broadway's theatres. Mr. Buckner's drive is intended to padlock cabarets. Mr. Banton's appeal to the public resulted in the recruiting of 300 citizens to serve on the play juries which will pass on questionable productions.

Mr. Buckner has appealed to the public patronizing Broadway cabarets, asking that every one witnessing a violation of the prohibition law send an affidavit to that effect to his office.

Mr. Buckner himself set an example in the move to place private citizens' aid in the campaign along Broadway. He spent $1,500 of his own money for champagne at $25 a quart and other drinks to be used as evidence.

TOBACCO COMPANY PUTS FIRE WARNINGS ON CIGARETTE PACKS

The Chamber of Commerce is in receipt of a letter from the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, which is in answer to a letter sent to this company, last summer regarding the placing of fire prevention warnings in packages of their cigarettes and tobacco. The letter received is as follows:

Chamber of Commerce,
Roseburg, Oregon.

Gentlemen:—Knowing of your interest and being in sympathy with the campaign in which you have been a participant to prevent the forest fires, and in order to cooperate yith you in that regard, we now advise that we shall issue instructions to insert in packages of Camel cigarettes and in packages of Prince Albert smoking tobacco for shipment to your state a printed notice as follows:

Help Prevent Forest Fires!

Be careful to avoid dropping burning matches lighted cigars or cigarettes, and ashes from pipes where they might start a fire.

Yours very truly,
R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

MEEHAN IS DUBBED LITTLE NAPOLEON

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

NEW YORK, Mar. 7.—John Francis Meehan, New York University's new football coach, can justly be dubbed "the little Napoleon of intercollegiate football."

One of the youngest of the major football coaches, he has sipped from the cup of victory as well as defeat and has treated criticism and praise with equal stoicism.

It was in the waning days of the football season of 1923 when the steel of the Meehan makeup was given its most severe test. At that time he was coach of an orange eleven at Syracuse which had swept the east. Not a rival jersey had crossed its goal line and only one goal had been kicked between its goal posts.

Alabama, Pittsburgh, William and Mary, Springfield, Penn State and Boston University had faltered before its attack. And then came Colgate, a time honored rival. The maroon tornado swept Syracuse before it, reaping a harvest in a startling 16 to 7 triumph.

Syracuse was shocked at the result, a storm of criticism resulting, but the "little Napoleon" carried on.

A journey to Lincoln, Neb., for a tilt with the University of Nebraska faced the team. Undaunted by criticism from all corners, Meehan picked up the remnants of a shattered eleven, mended its morale, welded together a new unit and tossed it into the lists against the corn husker rival which only two weeks previously had shattered the rising ambitions of Notre Dame. Again came an upset when the orange triumphed over its western rival, 7 to 0, and ended the season in a blaze of glory.

When New York University started on a hunt for a football coach last season, the athletic committee settled upon Meehan and called him from his alma mater to take charge of the violet squad. He responded and is now organizing his work at the Metropolitan institution.

GLENDALE STORE MOVES TO IT'S NEW LOCATION.

T. J. Miller & Son have purchased the store building on the corner of Third street and Pacific Avenue, formerly occupied by the E. J. Humphrey store, from J. O. Lystad, and have been moving their stock of groceries and feed from the former location just north of the City Meat Market.

The new location gives the Millers a larger display room, with better light and an entrance to their warehouse from Third street instead of through the alley.

T. J. Miller stated Monday that it is the intention of the firm to add dry goods to their stock in trade making a general store out of the business.

This firm has only been in business in this city about a month having purchased the Campbell store in January, yet they are firmly convinced that Glendale will develope into the best town in the county outside of Roseburg and they are anticipating the future by extending their business. —Glendale News.

NEW HOTEL TO OPEN IN GLENDALE SOON.

Frank Perdue, a rancher from near Days Creek and who formerly conducted the Overland Hotel at Canyonville, has this week purchased the old Overland Hotel from Olger Sether and expects to take possession some time this week. Mr. Perdue states that he will make extensive alterations in the building and expects to open the house for business in the near future. He will open a dining room in connection with the rooming house and do a regular hotel business. During his hotel days in Canyonville, Mr. Perdue established a reputation as a caterer which will follow him in his new venture and undoubtedly he will meet with a liberal patronage from the start. — Glendale News.

ROSEBURG FACES A TRAFFIC JAM

To the Editor
News-Review:

Roseburg faces a traffic jam. There can be no doubt. Her narrow streets are one of her handicaps. Parking on Jackson street will soon speak for itself. I would suggest those using the highway through Roseburg streets be given right of way in either direction, all intersecting streets a white line painted across, say about 10 feet from said Pacific highway. All traffic coming in on the intersections come to a complete stop at said line. To my mind this will prevent many accidents. Make no mistake in thinking we will not have a heavy bunch of tourist traffic soon.

This scheme would give a good impression to strangers, also please locals when once tried out.
