ROSEBURG, OREGON, THURSDAY, APRIL 2, 1925

ABOLISHING THE FAMILY

Some of the radical reformers are not satisfied with the institution of the family, and think that eventually children will be handed over to the state for their bringing up. They argue that in publicly managed institutions there would be more scientific care and training.

When will Roseburg merchants learn to "pass up" the fake advertising solicitor? Not one out of a hundred schemes promoted by these fellows is worth a copper cent.

The News-Review has a daily circulation of over four thousand two hundred copies. Is there any better—any cheaper—and more effective way of reaching the reading public than through the columns of this paper?

April is starting off without fooling anybody. The bill collectors are just as alert as ever.

It pays to trade at home. And it pays to advertise in your home paper.

The naked truth should be clothed with bare facts.

WILL TRY TO START ANOTHER COTTAGE

A fund large enough to justify the start of another cottage at the Children's Farm Home at Corvallis is the aim of the W. C. T. U. Dollar Day Drive which will take place here on April 7.

There are at present three cottages at the Home, but there is urgent need for more, as children are constantly being turned away. One of the three cottages is called Willard Hall, and was built, and is appropiated to a great extent by the W. C. T. U.

Some of the unfortunates come to the Home so dejected and run down physically that it takes often a year or more before they are imbued with ambition, and a desire to live right. Full play is given to their natural bent, and they are encouraged to study the subjects most interested in, and to pick their life work, be it teacher, farmer, or other occupation.

YONCALLA MEN WANT IMPROVEMENTS ON DISPUTED ROAD

The county court was today requested by a group of Yoncalla residents to make improvements to a short stretch of road at Yoncalla, the title to the short section, which is about four blocks long, being in dispute between the county and city. The county maintains that the city should maintain the road while the city insists that it is the county's duty. In the meantime the persons residing on the road are finding it impassable and are in need of relief. Among those who appeared before the court were A. R. Solle, Jake Nellis, T. H. Howard, Jake Mathis, W. A. Fuller, J. C. Wansley and Ben Huntington Sr.

OAKLAND DELEGATION BEFORE CO. COURT

A delegation of Oakland residents were in Roseburg today, appearing before the county court with a request for work on the road between Oakland and Elkton. They desire to have some of the market road fund allotted to that section, which is one of the important laterals of the county. The court promised that improvements will be made on various sections of the road during the summer, plans having already been approved for work on different portions. The delegation was composed of Jess K. Lasswell, Halston Bridges, G. L. Chewoweth, E. H. Pinkston and H. E. Mahoney.

MONTH OF MARCH WAS SHORT ON RAIN

There are only two months of March in the history of the weather bureau at Roseburg that had less rainfall than the month just past, according to the report of Wm. Bell, meteorologist, in charge of the local observatory. The total rainfall for March 1925 was 1.15 inches, while the normal is 4.98 inches. In 1885 the rainfall was .28 inch and in 1911 .75 inch, the record of the past month being the lowest in the 47 years that the station has been located in this city.
