FORESTRY HEAD TALKS ON ROAD WORK IN THIS ZONE

There is to be no letup in construction work on the Roosevelt coast highway, Senator McNary was assured yesterday by Colonel W. B. Greeley, chief of the United States forest service. Several sections of that highway have been included in the Oregon forest road system. Assurances, however, as to the early completion of Yaquina bay-Umpqua river section were not given by Colonel Greeley. The sections of the highway included in the program and the status of their construction follows:

Douglas-Coos county line—Coos Bay, 9.65 miles—under contract construction probably will be completed by June, 1925.

Yaquina bay-Umpqua river, 72.4 miles; no work.

"No work has been done on the Yaquina bay-Umpqua river section," said Colonel Greeley, "and the only information that is available is an approximate estimate by the bureau of public roads of $2,000,000 required for construction of this section. It will evidently require several years at our present scale of appropriations to complete this section of the road."

FARM NEWS

CANADIAN THISTLE A SERIOUS WEED PEST

(By B. W. Cooney)

Farming in all climates and countries has its hazards. The successful surmounting of these hazards keeps the farmer tuned up for the fight every day in the year. Possibly the largest production loss experienced by the agriculturist is the loss due to insects, pests and diseases attacking his livestock and field crops. This loss unquestionably reaches into hundreds of millions each year for the United States. While this loss is large it is not all the farmer is required to meet.

The annual battle waged against noxious weeds and poisonous plants calls for the expenditure of millions of dollars for machinery, spray materias, chemicals and labor. The contest cannot stop for even a moment or our fields, gardens and orchards would be a hopeless wreck. Weeds like everything else in the world are classified according to their ability to survive against man's self-defense program of destruction.

Each noxious weed has its peculiar habits of growth and plan of perpetuating the species. Long experience in the control of our many weed enemies has brought to light many interesting facts regarding the life history of these pests. It is, therefore, necessary to acquaint ones self with the life history of the weed we wish to destroy. This accomplished, we are ready for the first attack which will be one of care or preventing the pest to gain a foothold in our fields or gardens.

A realization of the very great loss any noxious weed can cause when well established in a community cannot be over estimated. Carelessness or ignorance of this truth is responsible for the establishment of many dangerous weeds. As before stated each weed pest has its habits of growth and therefore requires a distinct plan of control. Methods found successful in the control of one weed may not control another. It will not be possible in an article of this kind to outline the various plans of destroying our many noxious weeds. This can be accomplished to better advantage by writing the County Agent concerning difficult problems of weed control. It is desired, however, at this time to call attention to one very dangerous weed, namely Canadian Thistle, scientifically known as Serratula Arvenis. This name is formidable buino more so than the performance of the weed itself. This weed will i lef to itself will in a few short years take over a valuable ranch and thereby reduce its value many thousands of dollars.

The County Agent sincerely hopes that the farmers of this county will at once realize the grave danger of this weed, and proceed at once to destroy it root and branch should it make its appearance on their farms. The eradication of Canada Thistle is thoroughly dealt with in Farmers' Bulletin No 1002.

Guard Against "Flu" With Musterole

Influenza, Grippe and Pneumonia usually start with a cold. The moment you get those warning aches, get busy with good old Musterole.

Musterole is a counter-irritant that relieves congestion (which is what a cold really is) and stimulates circulation.

It has all the good qualities of the old-fashioned mustard plaster without the blister.

Just rub it on with your finger-tips. First you will feel a warm tingle as the healing ointment penetrates the pores, then a soothing, cooling sensation and quick relief.

Have Musterole handy for emergency use. It may prevent serious illness.

To Mothers: Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

SENIOR PLAY TO BE GIVEN THURSDAY

On Thursday, April 23, the Senior class will present the play entitled "Dulcy."

The members of the cast have been working very hard during the past six weeks under the capable supervision of Miss Christensen, the class advisor and Miss Ward. However, in order to get more experience the members of the cast are going to present the play in Myrtle Creek on Monday, April 20, so that by the time they are ready to put the play on in Roseburg, they will be in the very best of practice. After putting on the play in Roseburg Thursday, April 23, they are going to present it at Oakland on Friday, 24.

Besides having one of the best plays that has ever been acted out with home talent in Roseburg, the Senior class has created an orchestra of its own, which consists of a Piano, Violin, Saxophone, Flute, Clarinet, Cornet and Drum. This is the first time that any class has ever created an orchestra of its own, which will give those people attending the play a treat as they have been working hard practicing every night for the past six weeks.

The people of Roseburg and other places should give the Senior class the very best of its support in putting over this play as the proceeds obtained from it are going to be placed in the fund for purchasing a strip of land in the Laurelwood addition for use in school purposes.

OREGON AGGIE DEBATERS MAKING GREAT RECORD

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

CORVALLIS, Ore., April 18.—The Oregon Agricultural College debate team, which has just completed its extensive eastern schedule with a victory over Syracuse University, is on its way to Seattle for the final debate of the 9,500 mile tour. The last debate will be with the University of Washington April 27.

In eight debates against leading eastern institutions the westerners have won three, tied one, lost one, and three were no decision meets. Victories were won over Penn state, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Syracuse University.

The meet at Perdue was a tie and no decision meets were held at Northwestern, Ohio state and Bates College, Maine.

The single loss was to Kansas state in the first encounter. In all meets but one the Aggies upheld the affirmative of the question by granting power to congress to overrule decisions of the supreme court declaring acts of congress unconstitutional.

NORTHWEST PRODUCTS WORTHY OF PAID ADV'S.

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

PORTLAND, Ore., April 18.—Merits of soliciting for advertising from Northwest industries collectively or individually were discussed today by Representatives of the Northwest Newspaper Associations in session here.

Fred W. Kennedy, head of the University of Washington school of journalism, emphasized that all the newspapers are willing to boost Northwest products and that the industries in turn should use the newspapers for advertising instead of expecting publicity for nothing.

Representatives of the various state press associations yesterday organized the Pacific slope newspaper conference.

Hal H. Hoss, editor of the Morning Enterprise of Oregon City and president of the Oregon State Editorial Association, was elected president; Guy Flenner, Boise, Idaho, secretary of the Idaho Press Association, is secretary.

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today

By Idah McGlone Gibson

SYNOPSIS

Cleo Madison is entertaining a few friends. They are extremely modern in their attitude toward extremely modern in eta hr gfao the conventionalities. So much so that Cleo thinks it would be fun to read them quotations from her grandmother's diary. They are all thrilled at the idea. Grandmother's diary is so quaint, so modest that these modern day girls are thunderstruck. The girls go. Then, alone, Cleo thinks of her elopment with Paul Winthrop which is planned for the immediate future. She reads another passage of the modest, old-fashioned diary. It pricks her conscience. For, though engaged to Paul she, only the night before enjoyed the kisses of Chick Adams. Then Cleo wonders whether her grandmothers had missed anything. Cleo's parents had been rich. Now they were social climbers. So were Paul's. He has just been graduated from West Point and assigned to San Antonio. Both sets of parents opposed the match for identical reasons. Each wanted their child to marry money. So Cleo and Paul planned to elope if necessary.. Connie Terhune, wealthy, wanted to marry Paul. Cleo's mother is furious when she learns of Cleo's determination to marry Paul. She demands Cleo marry wealthy Chick Adams. Cleo and Paul attend a party at Connie Terhune's. The affair is lively. Chick Adams drawns Cleo aside protesting that she should have come with him.

JOKING WITH EROS.

Pulling Paul with me, I made my way to Connie and said, "I think we had better go home, dear."

"Why, what's the matter with you, Cleo?" she asked. "You've just come."

"Well, my dear, we have been here long enough for your friends to fill Paul with highballs. Look at him. He's "squiffed" already, and he has been a day and two nights on the train. Of course, he is very tired, though he doesn't know it yet."

"Good heavens, Cleo. Are you beginning to talk like a wife already?" remarked Connie.

I forgave her, for besides being a cat I knew that Connie Terhune was very much in love with Paul. She was willing to give him all her money and let him do anything he pleased with it, provided he would marry her.

"So you recognize, Connie, that I am beginning to talk like a wife. I didn't want to let the secret out so soon, but we are going to be married before Paul goes back to his post."

"If that is the case, my dear," said Connie in a low voice, "you had better begin to act like a poor man's wife, try to economize from now on."

"On the contrary," I told her, "I am going to be as extravagant as possible, for all the loot I can make off Dad will just be so much clear gain for my 'Loot.'"

"I hate puns," Connie snapped viciously.

I knew she wasn't hating my pun as much as she was hating me. She held out her hands to me, though, and said: "Well, goodby to you, and good luck to your nefarious designs. I hope I shall see you from time to time to see how you are progressing."

"Come over tomorrow, Connie," I said as I kissed her, "and I'll tell you all about it."

"Lucky girl," she whispered as she gave me a little hug.

I looked at her face quickly. Was it possible that I saw a tear in her eye? She turned away so quickly that I will never know.

I was walking on air, pulling Paul after me, as we went out to the taxi. His knees were slightly wabbly, but I didn't care. I had taken him away from the richest girl in town and I, Cleo Madison, was the poorest girl in the whole set.

We didn't talk much on our way home. My lover was tired and the liquor had gone to his head. Our love was so wonderful to me that I could not waste it in words.

I was brought down to earth, however, when we got home and Paul found that he did not have money enough to pay for the taxi. I left him sitting on the back seat, weeping because he was so poor, while I stole up to my room and got $5 out of my bag. It was the last bill I had. A little shiver ran down my spine, for I could not help thinking that never to have any money was going to be rather inconvinient after all.

Foolishly I handed the bill to him. He looked at it in astonishment, and then seeing the chauffeur standing by, had aglimmering of what was needed. He handed the $5 to the man and with drunken gravity tipped the man with my money much more than he should have done and put the rest of it in his own pocket. This was another eye-opener to me. I determined, if possible, I should never permit Paul, after we were married, to get in such a condition again.

All these uncomfortable ideas vanished, however, when Paul kissed me good night, lurched away from me down the steps and moved slowly toward his own home a little way down the street.

As I undressed and got into bed drunkeness and poverty had no place in my mind because my heart was setting up such a clamor and saying over and over again. "You are the happiest girl in the world, Cleo Madison."

My sweetheart was in town. He was the best looking chap in our set. He had come home to marry me within a month. I would be with him at the army post, where everything would be a glorified, thrilling love affair made possible by the laws of man and God.

A little doubt came over me just as I went to sleep, as I thought: "Well, I'll have to 'touch' Dad again before I go downtown in the morning." And then another idea came into my brain, which made me smile. Anyway, Paul would have enough money to pay his street car fare to the club to meet me.

Tomorrow — Old Time Love

TUBERCULIN TESTS ARE NECESSARY

It has long been recognized by health authorities and many others that there exists a close relation between bovine tuberculosis and tuberculosis in the human family. A recognition of this fact has been reflected in State laws requiring the tuberculin test to be given all dairy animals supplying raw milk and butter to the public.

The administration and enforcement of Oregon's law is lodged with the State Livestock Sanitary Board having offices in Salem, with Dr. W. H. Lytle, chief in charge.

Oregon's tuberculin test law was further strengthened by the last Legislative Assembly enacting into law House Bill No. 450 carrying certain amendments by the Senate. This law does not amend any former law, but provides for compulsory testing of all classes of bovine animals located in every county west of the summit of the Cascade mountains in Oregon. Certain exceptions are made covering beef cattle handled strictly as range stock.

The law provides that each County court named shall appoint a county herd inspector, who shall be a regular graduate of a veterinary college and have the approval of the State Veterinarian. The county enforcement of the law will be in charge of the appointee reporting to the County Court and State Livestock Sanitary Board. A fee of 25 cents per head will be charged for every animal so tested. Fees so collected shall enter a fund for the purposes of defraying the salary and expenses of the veterinarian having the work in charge. This law will be in full force and effect June 1, 1925. The law provides a rather heavy penalty for any person refusing to present stock for testing or in any way interfere with its enforcement.

At this time the County Agent is assisting the various communities in getting as many animals tested as possible before the law goes into effect. Until the law becomes operative testing is done free where a number of animals can be gotten together.

ANTHONY EUWER TO GIVE CONCERT HERE ON TUESDAY, APRIL 21

Anthony Euwer, the three-in-one artist, will appear at the High School Auditorium on Tuesday, April 21st at eight o'clock, under the auspices of the H. S. P. T. A. Mr. Euwer is styled the three-in-one artist,because he is a writer, an illustrator and a platform humorist. He received his training for a writer at Princeton University, and for an illustrator at the Art Students' League of New York. His drawings have appeared in Harper's, Scribner's' Collier's Life, and a host of syndicated papers. He says that sometimes when the editor didn't like his verses, he would take them for the sake of the drawings; and sometimes, when they didn't like the drawings, they would take them for the sake of the verses. The grotesque tabbys that romp through "Christopher Crickets on cats" have been reproduced in both American and English periodicals. His limericks have become a part of the vocabulary of the general public.

Mr. Euwer belongs to the original humorists of the lyceum platform. He does his own stuff and puts it over in a way that is strictly his own. When John Kendrick Bangs was editor of the New York Weekly, Euwer stepped in one morning and read him some of his verses. "Now if you could go around and read your verses to the editors in person," said his genial host, "I'm sure you would sell everything you write."

In 1911 Mr. Euwer decided to add to the gayety of nations by going abroad and so he went to London just to see if a Britisher really could tell an American joke when he heard it. Euwer says, "I waited for five weeks for my first appearance after the British mode. Finally it came. It was the end of Cricket Week and the King's elect were there. Five minutes after the start, I was the most surprised person in the assembly. I had to wait for them to stop laughing.

In the fall of 1918 Mr. Euwer again crossed the seas to add to the cheer of the American troops in France. He spent over six months working with the army among the camps and in the hospitals ,covering most of France and the Rhine country. Some of his most stirring verse was written on this trip. Probably the most widely quoted was that splendid tribute to the French Poilu, which appeared in Leslie's, called "The Frogs of France."

Mr. Euwer has several volumes of poems out. Among them are: "Wings and Other War Poems," "The Limeratomy," "Christopher on Cats," and Rhymes of Our Valley."

The Oregonian says, "We wept and we smiled with Anthony Euwer over the sorrows and joys and the whimsical haps and happen in the Hood River Valley."

The New York World says, "In justice to Mr. Euwer's three-fold means of artistic and temperamental expression—as writer, as illustrator, as entertainer—it should here be said seriously and emphatically that his verses, which he recites admirably, have the true lyrical lilt."

The New York Telegraph says, "There is always a lyric note to his verses, his fine sense of humor puts his nonsense jingles in the line of the classical."
