UNUSUAL SLANTS AT UNUSUAL PEOPLE

OXFORD, England, May 5.—Once a fighter, always a fighter. William Henry Henagolph, most of whose life has been spent within smell of powder and sound of bursting shell, still feels the stirring fire of action in his veins, at 92. He is healthy and active, a fact he attributes to his active life.

He feels so young that he wants to enlist in the army again, just to show 'em that one nonagenarian isn't so old.

Army officials have, of course, refused his application.

Henagolph is a veteran of the Crimean, British Indian and Burmese wars. He remembers vividly the different strenuous campaigns in which he plays a part.

This old man comes of a long line of Norse kings.
