FINAL REPORT OF GRAND JURY IS SUBMITTED

here exposed could exist in the state of Oregon. Instruction of children along moral and sexual lines must be given at home if the children are to have even a fighting chance in life. We earnestly request the parents of the children of Douglas County to instruct their children along such lines, to talk with them regarding their thoughts and actions, and to use their every effort to see that their children shall not reach the sad plight of those who have been before this body.

We have inquired into the condition and management of the offices pertaining to the courts of justice of Douglas County and into the care and management of the County Poor Farm and County Jail.

We do not feel that any repairs should be made in the jail other than such as are necessary for the immediate preservation of the health of the inmates or for the security of the people from jail-break. Our investigation has disclosed that the toilet on the lower floor of the jail is in a bad condition and is, we believe, a menace to the health of persons confined in the jail. Immediate steps should be taken to repair this toilet and make the same sanitary. We urgently request the County Court to make further provision for the health of the inmates by increasing the size of the lower windows on the east side of the jail so as to admit sufficient light during the day and so obviate the necessity of electric lights during the day time. If it does not entail too great expense it would be well to set the east side of the main cage further from the east wall and so permit those having custody of the prisoners to enter between the cage and the east wall of the jail and so have clear observation of conditions within this main cell.

The conduct and operation of the county poor farm is most excellent. The County is fortunate in having Mr. Bolsinger in charge of this work. Some slight repairs in the main building at the poor farm are urgently needed. We recommend that steps be taken to properly heat that portion of the upper story which has been recently divided into several rooms. This, we believe, could be done cheaply by enlarging the present heating pipe leading to a radiator in the upper hall. The leaks in the cave droughs should be repaired at once for the preservation of the building itself. Provision should be made for admission of natural light to that portion of the building at the head of the stairs. This could be done by the installation of a small skylight at very little expense. These suggested changes could be made without much cost and are, in our opinion, needed at the present time.

We find no criticism to be made in the conduct of county affairs. The only criticism we have is that voiced by many preceding Grand Juries, to-wit: the serious fire menace to County records occasioned by the present court house and its numerous stoves. After carefully considering this question, we desire to make to the County Court the same recommendation made by the preceding Grand Jury, that is, that the question of constructing a new court house and jail so long urgently needed in Douglas County, by the voting of a special tax be placed before the voters at the next general or special election to be had in Douglas County. A tax of 2½ mills for two years, or at the most three years, will fully provide for the construction and equipment of a modern court house and jail and give to the priceless records of the county proper safety. Because of the magnitude of this undertaking, we believe that it should be done only upon approval of the majority of the voters of the county. We have no doubt that that approval would be given if the general public could understand the present continual fire menace that exists.

We have now concluded our labors and stand ready to be dismissed.

Respectfully submitted,

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today

By Idah McGlone Gibson

Cleo Madison entertaining a few friends, decides to read her grandmother's diary. Grandmother's diary is so quaint, so modest, that these modern-day girls are thunderstruck. When the girls go, Cleo thinks of her elopment with Paul.

Paul Winthrop planned for the immediate future. Her conscience is pricked by a passage of the modest, old-fashioned diary. For though engaged to Paul, she, only the night before enjoyed the kisses of Chick Adams. Both sets of parents opposed the match because at one time the families had been rich but now were social climbers, and the parents wanted each to marry money. Connie Terhune, wealthy, wanted to marry Paul. At a party, Chick Adams draws Cleo aside protesting that she should have come with him. Cleo doubts her love for Paul. Her grandmother's diary makes Cleo wonder. Paul protests his love for the girl. They are wed. Cleo's mother becomes hysteric. Connie shows again her jealousy. The fathers of the newly-weds rejoice. The honeymoon begins. The fierce flame of her love almost overwhelms Cleo. The honeymoon grows more efulgent. The reception for the newly-weds shows Connie in her true light. Cleo becomes jealous. Chick Adams enters a plot. The young wife foils her "friend." The first tears of her married life come to Cleo. Paul and his wife decide to start out for themselves.

Cleo sees Paul and Connie in fervent embrace.

Almost crazed by liquor and jealousy Paul threatens Chick.

The young husband accuses his wife as to a past.

Contritely, Paul expresses his belief in Cleo.

The quarrel is settled.

Paul has forgotten to get the railroad tickets, but the matter is settled peaceably.

Paul gives Connie the cold shoulder at the station, which pleases Cleo.

The newlyweds start on their honeymoon.

After a snappy discussion with Paul, Cleo goes to sleep in the Pullman chair, when Paul goes to the smoking compartment.

CLEO'S DREAM.

Paul said it had only been only eight minutes since he had left me when he returned from the smoking room, but I could not believe him. In the few minutes of that dream I went through the agony it seemed possible for human courage to endure and still fight on.

"When I came back Cleo," he said after shaking me awake and looking rather apprehensively into my fearfilled eyes, "I found you sleeping very soundly."

"Oh Paul, I hope I didn't make any noise." As I said this I looked across the aisle at the man who had smiled at me so kindly and understatndingly just a few minutes earlier.

"No you were not making any particular noise until I tried to move you into an easier position. Then you suddenly developed a Dempsey wallop which took me under the chin and nearly knocked me out. "What's the matter, dear," I exclaimed and I am afraid I shook you a bit for you drew a long breath and opened your eyes which were filled with fear. For an instant you clung to me. Then you awakened and whispered 'Oh Paul, I am so glad it was only a dream.'"

I did not tell Paul at that moment what I had been dreaming, but I wrote it down here just as soon as I got the chance, for I am sure that in that few minutes' sleep I had been given a prophetic glance into the future which lay before me.

I dreamed that Paul and I were walking along a beautiful shady path. The air was fragrant with flowers that bordered its sides with pink and blue and yellow and purple. The birds were singing in the trees overhead.

Holding hands, Paul and I were swinging just as children do in play. We had no thought of the present or the future, we were just being happy. We did not know where the path ended. It was sufficient to us that it was beautiful now.

All at once Paul stopped and pointed to a distant spot where the dearest little house I ever saw stood on a sunny slope. Paul seemed to understand immediately. "That is ours," he said. I hastened along toward it. Then all at once the scene changed. I was alone. I couldn't find Paul. The sky was overcast. The little house was enveloped in a murky veil. Out of it came mutterings and other queer sounds that struck terror to my soul.

"Paul, Paul," I cried, "where are you?"

"I don't know," he answered. "I'm trying to find the little house. Come to me."

"No, you must come to me. I am afraid Paul,' I said in my dream. "I dare not go on one step without you."

Then I seemed to hear his voice raised in fear—the fear of some unseen thing. Again I called. "Come my husband, come and help me to find again the little house."

"I can't." Paul shouted. "I know we shall find each other only inside its doors. Let's go to it immediately by ourselves."

The atmosphere lightened a little and I saw the faint outlines of the little house through the misty grey, but I recoiled with a cry, for in front of it lay a great scaly monster with long tentacles growing out of its side and ending in ugly claws. They were squirming all about as though on the lookout for Paul and me.

"Where are you? Where are you Paul?" I called in an agony of fear.

"Here," he said.

"But your voice sounds so far away and I can not see you. I can only see that great ugly dragon that guards the door."

Suddenly I sensed that I didn't know my real husband that I would not know him if I saw him that I would never find him and happiness, until I had vanquished that terrible serpent that guarded the threshold of my home. Trembling, I moved nearer and nearer and then I saw that each one of those long ugly tentacles had a name made of shining brass scales along its squirming claws. One was thoughtlessness; one was selfishness; one was extravagance; one was uncharitableness; one was jealousy, and one—perhaps the longest—was misunderstanding.

Each one seemed to be trying to get me in its fearsome clasp. I knew I had to cut each one of those tentacles off that loathsome body and conquer the dragon before I would cross the threshold of my home which had only been a house before.
