BELIEVE NORTH POLE REACHED BY AMUNDSEN

ed, "that any man, however good a pilot, can fly from the north end of Spitzbergen for a distance of 600 miles in a straight line and drop down upon the North Pole, or even within fifty miles of it."

MacMillan, who will head the MacMillan Arctic expedition, arrived here today to confer with officials of the National Geographic Society and naval officers, including Rear-Admiral Moffett, chief of the naval air service.

"If Amundsen's planes should be down in rough ice it would take several days to construct a 'run' for his planes," MacMillan continued. "If he missed Spitzbergen on his return, he would, adrift, and out of gas, with the remote possibility of rescue, and is in fear of the worst in spite of his month's provisions. To walk over the rough and snow-covered ice of the Polar sea, intersected with open and thin ice covered leads for 600 miles to Spitzbergen or 413 miles to Cape Columbia at this time of the year, is utterly impossible for the best of men."

LOS ANGELES, May 27.—Plans for a seaplane expedition to go to the relief of Roald Amundsen, Polar explorer, which have been going forward here for several days, under the direction of Hakon H. Haunmer, who led the relief of Amundsen in 1913, have been halted on advice from the Spitzbergen headquarters of the American Norwegian expedition that such a plan is premature.

Mrs. H. McIntyre and daughter, of Eugene, arrived here yesterday evening and visited overnight with Mrs. McIntyre's sister, Mrs. E. H. Van Riper. They left this morning for Talent to visit for a time with Mrs. McIntyre's parents.
