BRAMWELL BANK EXAMINER FINED $50; TO APPEAL

SALEM, Ore., May 29.—Frank C. Bramwell, state superintendent of banks, was fined $50 for contempt of court yesterday by Judge L. H. McMahan. The contempt proceeding was filed against Bramwell when he refused to appear in court and give his reasons for filing an affidavit of prejudice against McMahan in the case of Putnam against Bramwell. The latter is an injunction proceeding in which George Putnam, publisher of the Capital Journal, seeks to compel Bramwell to return the state banking department to Salem from Portland.

Upon imposition of the $50 fine, Bramwell at once filed notice of appeal to the supreme court from the order of the lower court holding Bramwell guilty of contempt. The case will test the constitutionality of the law that allows the filing of affidavits of prejudice against judges.

WOMAN INJURED IN AUTO COLLISION AT MYRTLE CREEK

Mrs. E. S. Lashley, of San Francisco, Cal., was injured yesterday evening at Myrtle Creek, when the car in which she and her husband were riding, was struck by another car driven by California tourists on the state bridge just north of Myrtle Creek. Mr. and Mrs. Lashley, who were on their way to Beaverton, Oregon, were driving north, and were just crossing the bridge, when the other parties, going south, also drove on the bridge. For some unknown reason the two machines collided near the center of the bridge, the woman being thrown through the windshield, and to the pavement.

She sustained a deep gash above the left eye, the scalp being cut open to the bone. She was rushed to this city, where her injuries were treated by Dr. Shoemaker, and removed to Mercy hospital. Although painfully injured her condition is not serious.

ARTISANS ENJOY BANQUET AND DANCE

Between fifty and seventy-five automobiles, bearing members of the Artisan Lodge to the convention to be held at Grants Pass Saturday and Sunday, arrived in the city yesterday afternoon shortly after 4 o'clock, following an uneventful trip from Portland, and spent the night here. The visitors were met by delegations of the Umpqua Chiefs and Squaws and were welcomed to the city by this hospitality club. Drill teams from all parts of Oregon were in the party, and these were entertained at a banquet by the Roseburg lodge, following which a street parade was held, led by the American Legion Drum Corps, with the Umpqua Chiefs, and Squaws, the uniformed drill teams, and nearly 200 other members of the Artisan lodge participating.

The remainder of the evening was given over to a colorful dance at the Army. The gay drill team costumes gave a piquant charm to the event, both for the dancers and the spectators.

The various drill teams put on their evolutions during the program which was greatly enjoyed.

A Love Story of Today
By Idah McGlone Gibson

Paul Winthrop planned for the immediate future. Her conscience is pricked by a passage of the modest, old-fashioned diary. For though engaged to Paul, she, only the night before enjoyed the kisses of Chick Adams. Both sets of parents opposed the match because at one time the families had been rich but now were social climbers, and the parents wanted each to marry money. Connie Terhune, wealthy, wanted to marry Paul. At a party, Chick Adams draws Cleo aside protesting that she should have come with him. Cleo doubts her love for Paul. Her grandmother's diary makes Cleo wonder. Paul protests his love for the girl. They are wed. Cleo's mother becomes hysterical. Connie shows again her jealousy.

The fathers of the newly-weds rejoice. The honeymoon begins. The fierce flame of her love comes more overwhelmings Cleo. The honeymoon grows more idyllic. The reception for the newly-weds shows Connie in her true light. Cleo becomes jealous. Chick Adams enters a plot. The young wife falls for "friend." The first tears of her married life come to Cleo. Paul and his wife decide to start out for themselves. Cleo sees Paul and Connie in fervent embrace.

Almost crazed by honor and jealousy Paul threatens Chick. The young husband accuses his wife as to a past love affair. Confrontly, Paul expresses his belief in Cleo.

The quarrel is settled. Paul has forgotten to get the railroad tickets, but the matter is given peaceably. Paul gives Connie the cold shoulder at the station, which pleases Cleo.

The newlyweds start on their honeymoon. After a snappy discussion with Paul, Cleo goes to sleep in the Pullman chair, when Paul goes to the smoking compartment. Cleo has a mystic dream.

She fathoms this in terms of present day. The young wife burns marriage is not all a rose path. An old married lady smooths Cleo's path.

COLONEL BELDON CALLS Mrs. Melbourne laughed heartily when I said that I didn't want to see anyone that afternoon. "You are a frank little thing," she remarked as she picked up one of my dresses. "Tell me what clothes you are going to use for your dresses and which one you will fix up for your husband."

"It will not make much difference," I answered, as I mechanically picked up my gold dress and hung it in the closet next my bed. "I will probably use these clothes indiscriminately."

"Don't you do it, my dear, don't you do it. You put your dresses in here and your husband's things in the closet next to the bathroom and be sure you let him have it and a bureau drawer or two all to himself."

"I remember the first quarrel we had and I had after we were married was because I put my handkerchiefs in the same drawer with his. He was in a hurry one morning and, without looking, he took out one of my handkerchiefs and stuck it in his pocket. He pulled it out in the mess room and got ragged by the boys for the rest of the day. He tried to tell them that it was mine, but it only made matters worse. It is over such little things as that, my dear, that the most serious quarrels begin between husband and wife."

"I thought of what Paul had said about 'buttering my bread' in the morning and agreed with her. Such was the efficiency of Mrs. Melbourne that in a very little while the trunks were all unpacked and everything in them was distributed carefully. My kindly neighbor had had time to explain over my pretty dresses, and she did seem so sweet that I began to feel that life would not be so terrible at the post after all. As she left she said, "If I were you I would have my tea table ready this afternoon. You can make some cinnamon toast and a cup of tea and that will be all that is necessary."

Oh, how I wished for Matt with his linear voice and his Japanese smile. I was ashamed to tell her that I never had made a cup of tea in my life. She saw, however, that I looked rather vaguely about and said: "I know Capt.

Atterton left his tea things here. You will probably find them put away carefully by Johnson. I am glad you are going to have Johnson. I think he is the best striker in the place.

"Goodbye, my dear, I'll see you at the party."

That dear woman with a look on her face that I was sure was pity, stooped and kissed me. I felt the tears start to my eyes again.

After she had left I realized that I had had nothing to eat since my early breakfast. I went out into the kitchen and almost had hysterics as I saw the dirty dishes piled up, but I was a little comforted by finding that there was still coffee in the percolator and was further calmed by seeing Johnson come in at the back door. He asked me if there was anything he could do.

"Johnson," I asked solemnly "can you make cinnamon toast?"

"Yes, Mrs. Armstrong, I can make it. Do you want some with your coffee?"

"No, but Mrs. Melbourne was just over here and she said that I might expect company this afternoon and I thought I would like cinnamon toast with tea. You see at my home Matt, our Jay boy, always served the tea, so I never made any. I will make it for me once, however. I think I won't have to trouble you again."

"All right Mrs. Armstrong, you shall have your tea and toast. I always used to make it for Capt. Atterton, ma'am. I just came in to clear up these dishes and to put everything in shipshape before the lieutenant came home."

"Johnson, you certainly have relieved my mind," I said as we sorted out the tea things and set up the tea table ready to be brought into the living room at a moment's notice. In the meantime I poured myself a piece of bread and poured out a cup of warmed over coffee. After I had eaten I looked at myself in the glass, powdered my nose a little and rouged my lips. I had decided not to change my traveling dress. It looked well enough to receive anyone. About 4 o'clock the doorbell rang. Johnson opened the door and ushered in Col. Beldon. As Johnson announced his name, I came forward explaining that Paul was not at home.

"I know it," he said as he came forward with a most fascinating smile. "I arranged to put him on duty the moment he reported. I wanted to come and see you alone. I wanted to know you when that good-looking husband of yours was not around."

Sure death to gophers, squirrels, mice, crows, etc. if you use our poison. Lloyd Crocker.
