WOMEN'S CLUB IN FIGHT FOR TRUE LABELS ON GOODS

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

WEST BADEN, Ind., June 2.—An ambitious legislative program for the next two years was recommended today to the biennial council of the general federation of women's clubs, in convention here by Mrs. Gilbert Davis of Windsor, Vt., chairman of the legislative committee during the preceding biennium.

After reporting the activity of her committee in behalf of legislation endorsed two years ago, Mrs. Davis recommended that, in addition to continuing sponsoring six projects already endorsed, the federation add to the program endorsement of the Merritt "misbranding bill," now pending in congress, and of legislation to dignify the position of the American housewife and place her industrially under the proper classification in the United States census.

The Merritt bill is recommended in preference to the Capper "truth in fabric" measure.

The endorsement program recommended by Mrs. Davis includes United States participation in the international court of justice, law enforcement, education, bill, which provides for the addition of a secretary of education to the president's cabinet; an intensive campaign of education on the child labor amendment and consideration of child labor laws in the state with a view to strengthening them; uniform marriage and divorce law; and opposition to the equal rights amendment and the war departments Worth-Garrett amendment.

Communist activities among school children of the United States were scored in a resolution presented to the council. The resolution urged an investigation of soviet propaganda among young Americans.

An important event for business women will be the regular luncheon of the Roseburg Business and Professional Women's club on Friday, June 5, at the Hotel Umpqua.

The luncheon has been formerly held at the Palace of Sweets where the luncheons have formerly been held. There will be two important features of the luncheon, one of the visit of the state president, Mrs. M. J. Palmer, of Hood River, president, planned to speed up the business of the convention which opened at 10 o'clock today.

The greater part of today's session was devoted to organizing.

Mr. Palmer pointed out that during the past two years Oregon has ranked at the head of the union in growth in membership and expressed the hope that a similar record would be made for 1925. At the present time Oregon has 215 active grangers. Of these, 13 are in Western Oregon and 80 east of the Cascade mountains.

The Baker delegation admitted that the principal obstacle in getting the next convention was the distance, involving expense to delegates, but the eastern Oregon men were hoping to work this out. They are counting on road improvements in their part of the state to facilitate travel.

Dallas is highly decorated to greet the grangers. Private homes and hotels are taking care of the visitors.

SOVIET IS BLAMED FOR AFGHAN REVOLT

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

LONDON, June 2.—The British forces in India are moving to the vicinity of the Afghanistan-Indian frontier as the result of reports reaching official circles here of an imminent general uprising in Afghanistan against the Emir.

The reported proposed uprising is rumored to be the result of the activities of Soviet emissaries who have been working in Afghanistan during the last 2 years.

The reports to official circles in London say that rebellions against the Emir have been frequent during the last three months, culminating in the recent execution near Kabul. According to these advice, the forces opposing the Emir have been gaining ground. The rebellion is said to be due to the natives' dislike of the Emir's attempt to modernize the government of Afghanistan. They refused to allow the Emir to interfere with their local religious tribal governments. Foreign agitators, it is said, utilized this situation to stir up civil warfare.

CONDITION OF MISS KNOX REMAINS ABOUT SAME

The condition of Miss Evangeline Knox, of Grants Pass, who was injured in an auto accident south of this city Sunday, and was taken to Mercy Hospital, is reported about the same today by her physician in attendance, Dr. Chas. B. Wade. Miss Knox received a bad gash in the cheek, splitting it from mouth to ear, and owing to the nature of the injury, the face is very badly swollen. It will leave a bad scar, but it is thought that unless unforeseen complications arise, she will recover nicely.

OREGON GRANGERS' ANNUAL SESSION OPENS AT DALLAS

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

DALLAS, Ore., June 2.—As delegates were crowding into Dallas today for the opening of the annual convention of the Oregon State Grangers, a determined effort was launched by the Baker delegation to capture the 1926 convention for that city.

The Baker boosters were making their plea at the head of the recent growth and activity of the granges, east of the Hise mountains in Baker, Union, Walla and Grant counties.

George A. Palmer, of Hood River, president, planned to speed up the business of the convention which opened at 10 o'clock today.

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today
By Idah McGlone Gibson

Cleo Madison, entertaining a few friends, reads from her grandmother's quaint, modest diary. The flapper friends are thunder-struck at its quaintness and suppressed feelings. When the girls leave, Cleo plans her elopement with Paul Armstrong, U. S. A., a boyhood sweetheart. None the less, she indulges in a petting party with Chick Adams that evening. Chick is wealthy and Cleo's parents wish her to marry the son of a doctor. Paul's parents, also social climbers who have lost their money, wish Paul to marry Connie Terhune, very rich and in love with Paul. Despite these desires of the parents and Cleo's wonderings as to whether she really does love Paul, the two are married. Almost immediately Cleo begins to learn that marriage is not altogether a path of roses. However, the parents are reconciled to the marriage and the young couple depart for the army post, to which Paul is assigned.

On the train Cleo has an allegorical dream which indicates the problems she will have to face. When the newlyweds arrive at the post, Paul is assigned to duty at once and leaves Cleo, who knows nothing of house-keeping, to shift for herself during the day. Johnson, a strikebreaker, detailed to Paul's quarters, helps out enormously so Cleo is able to serve tea when Col. Beldon, the commanding officer, comes to pay his respects.

Rita Thorncliffe, supposed inamorata of Col. Beldon, calls. Cleo likes her.

CLEO AVOIDS A TRAP.

Mrs. Armstrong, I shall expect you for dinner at 7 o'clock this evening," Col. Beldon as he arose to take his leave.

"Thank you very much, Colonel. Paul and I will be there. Perhaps Mrs. Thorncliffe will come over with us as she is alone. You see, I am rather shy about my new duties, and I would feel so much better to have some one beside me who knows the social conventions of the post when I meet the other officers' wives. You know, Mrs. Thorncliffe is not much older than I, and I anticipate she is going to be my dearest friend," Col. Beldon bowed.

"I said this with malice aforethought and waited expectantly to see where the remark would strike her first. Mrs. Thorncliffe spoke up in pleased surprise. 'Oh would you like me to go with you? I would be delighted. I know just how lonely you are. It seemed to me when I first came here, that I had come to a prison. I caught a frowning glance from the Colonel to Mrs. Thorncliffe, but it quickly changed into a smile when it reached me. He was still standing and now made a move toward the door. 'Why don't you wait and have some tea Colone!' I asked as Johnson came in with the tray. 'I hope he has some of that famous cinnamon toast he used to make for Capt. Atherton,' said Mrs. Thorncliffe.

And none of Atherton's famous scotch," supplemented the Colonel as he seated himself again and looked expectantly at Johnson.

"I'm very sorry sir," said the man respectfully, "but the captain did not leave any liquor in the house."

Col. Beldon looked as though he was sorry he had sat down again.

"Well, well, we'll have to remedy that, Johnson. Call around at my quarters and I'll send Mrs. Armstrong over some of the last of my new-war stuff."

"Oh, you mustn't do that," I interrupted hastily. "I wouldn't have you do it for the world. I would not deprive you of pre-war stuff. It is getting an ever scarce now." I almost wondered if I caught a wink from the Colonel as he scotch toward Johnson. It didn't seem possible, however, that an officer would be so familiar with one of his men.

"My dear Mrs. Armstrong, I do not expect to be deprived of it, but I don't mind telling you that I am sure to be an old man when it is used. I like to know what I am drinking, even in the houses of my friends." Although he said this in a joking way, I knew he meant every word of it. What Col. Beldon intended to do was to send me over a case of whisky, which I decided now was not pre-war stuff at all and was giving the fair warning that it was not to be served except when he was one of the party.

I knew from the looks of Mrs. Thorncliffe that that was the condition with which he had surrounded a similar gift to her, and I decided then and there that I would not be caught so easily.

The Colonel drank his cup of tea hastily, declined the toast, and then made his adieu. Paul came in just as the Colonel left. He must have passed him at the door. He was very tired. I could see that after introducing him to Mrs. Thorncliffe. I hastened to give him a cup of tea and I poured into it the remaining contents of my flask, with apologies to Mrs. Thorncliffe.

"I wasn't going to give the last few drops of hooch I had to the Colonel after he had kept Paul on duty all day. Would you?"

"I certainly would not," she answered with a brilliant smile. "I am very glad Cleo that you didn't do it. You have saved my life. How in the world were you able to serve tea?"

"Johnson came around and told me he knew how to make cinnamon toast. I expect I'll have to learn sometime, but I know I should have burned it, and spoiled the tea today."

"I think it was rotten of Old Beldon to put me on duty the moment I got in and if he had come over here and drunk up the last few drops of my whisky—"

"My whisky," I interrupted. "Our whisky, then," grinned Paul. "What I want to say about it, however, is that I should never have forgiven him."

"I'm going to say goodbye," said Mrs. horncliffe. "I'll run along home and get ready for dinner. I expect every woman at the Post will have her very best bits and tucks tonight. They are going to vie with the bride if possible."

"It can't be done Mrs. Thorncliffe. It can't be done," said my blessed Paul.

FUNERAL RITES TO BE QUIET LIFE OF T. R. MARSHALL

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

WASHINGTON, June 2.—Shocked by the suddenness of his passing, Washington took full advantage today of its brief opportunity to honor the memory of Thomas R. Marshall, war time vice-president, who died here yesterday.

Only a short funeral service will be held here late today, before the body is taken back to Mr. Marshall's native Indiana, but the nation's tribute will be paid in that brief space.

Surrounded by high officials of the government in which the kindly man occupied such an important role during the eight historic years, President Coolidge, on behalf of the nation, will administer last rites this afternoon at the New Willard hotel, where the death occurred. Simple services, reflecting the plain life of the man will be held at the hotel. They will be conducted by the Rev. Dr. Charles Wood of the church of the covenant, where the Marshalls attended during their Washington residence.
