OREGON NOW HAS 163,037 AUTOS OF PASSENGER CLASS

(Associated Press Leased Wire.) SALEM, Ore., June 8.—The registration of passenger automobiles in Oregon for the first five months of the year was 163,037, according to Secretary of State Koser, an increase of 15,853 for the corresponding period of 1924. The registration of trucks and dealers gained in proportion while the registration of motorcycles, chauffeurs and operators showed a slight decrease. The total in registration fees collected for the five months was $1,737,205.64, against $4,251,304.52 in the same period last year.

Passenger vehicle registrations for May were 38,111, an increase of 220 over May of last year. All fees received in May were $226,101.95 against $211,907.59 for May of last year.

Since the enactment of the first motor vehicle fuels tax in 1919 the funds accruing to the state from that source have averaged $8,496,295.26. During the month of April, this year, $229,221.40 was collected.

The law allowing refund on fuel used for purposes other than vehicle operation on his highways was amended by the 1925 legislature in two ways. The time for filing claims for refunds was extended from 90 days to one year, and the rate of refund on distillate was changed to 23 cents a gallon.

PREHISTORIC ART OF MEXICO LIKENED TO THAT OF EGYPT

TEPIC, Nayarit, Mexico, June 8.—E. O. Matthews, an American versed in Mexican archeology, says that some of his recent discoveries of prehistoric relics in western Mexico show striking similarity to the ancient art of Egypt.

Mr. Matthews points out that while much data concerning the Toltecs and their successors, the Aztecs, has been gleaned from central and eastern Mexico, little has been learned regarding the history of those who dwell on the western shores. He is giving his attention to supplying more information of regions archeologically uncharted, and has uncovered weapons, articles of domestic utility and adornment and grotesque images of religious portent.

A recent press dispatch from Mexico City told of a party of excursionists in Vera Cruz state that found hidden in a cave near Orizaba, a large collection of Aztec idols. These images still were being worshipped by Indians of that remote region, who continued to follow ceremonies supposed to date years ago. It was reported that after a battle with the Indians the tourists captured many of the most beautiful. The University of Orizaba has organized an expedition to explore the locality more thoroughly.

Commenting on this find of idols Mr. Matthews deplored the use of force and recalled an experience he had a few years ago. Near Teococ he too found a cave filled with idols and other objects of prehistoric antiquity. The Indians, holding confidence in him, allowed him to select several of the art treasures on his promise that he would not reveal the hiding place. He chose three idols and a large earthenware bath-tub. They were forwarded to the Metropolitan Museum in New York, where they are on exhibition. He kept faith with the Teococ Indians, and they have not been molested.

CONCERNING VACATIONS.

Why are vacations, anyway? Why do we break into the ordered routine of a perfectly cheerful and useful life, and go wandering off into the various wades of the world in search of whatever it is we are looking for? What makes us shift restlessly on our office chairs when the balmy breezes of early summer begin to rattle the papers on our desks? And why do we catch ourselves wandering absentmindedly in to a sporting-goods store, when the wife asked us to bring home two pounds of steak last night?

Change is a wonderful thing. It's natural to develop a craving for surroundings and life that we miss in our daily routine. The yearning of the lonely procetor for a good blowout in the biggest place nearby is no stronger than the desire of the city dweller for a spell of "back to nature." Both these feelings are perfectly normal, and on the way that we go about fulfilling these wants of ours for a change depends the success or failure of our vacation.

Change is the first essential to a vacation. For a real rest, we must leave our usual haunts and occupations and find new ones. Rest is not an entire lack of occupation, but indulging in pursuits which are strange to us in our ordinary life. The lonesome worker in the open wants safety and social diversion; the worried office worker needs physical exercise and enough mental exertion to keep his mind off his problems.

The greatest danger in taking vacations is that of overdoing. We are supposed to return to work rested, refreshed and ready for another period of our duty work. Instead we often come back home to recuperate from our vacation. It is very easy to get carried away by the joy of the unusual outdoor life, or by the attractions of the social swirl, and to attempt feats that would have taxed our powers when we were much younger and in better condition to stand the strain. We must pick the place which will give us the sort of relaxation we need, and then we must take it in the proper doses.

The best plan is not to confine the vacation to one lump, once a year. A longer vacation at that time is very useful, but it is much better to get entirely away from our work oftener—once a week, say, than to be for only a few hours. When we do that, we are not apt to overdo things; we spread our enjoyment over a longer period and get the good effects of vacation permanently. This need not rule out the usual holiday—but let us plan definitely to leave our routine behind us for one day a week, or half a day, all through the year. Then let us seriously organize the time so that it will be a true vacation in every sense of the word—as far removed from business as possible, and giving us what we do not get the rest of the week. This will be the very best kind of a holiday for us.

LAW ENFORCEMENT SQUADRON COMING

OPPOSES FEDERAL HIGHWAY AID; OFFICE DECLINED.

(Associated Press Leased Wire.) BOSTON, June 6.—Governor Alvin T. Fuller today formally refused to accept the Presidency of the United States Good Roads Association to which he was elected at the thirteenth annual convention at Houston, Tex., in April. He gave as his reason the action of the convention in voting in favor of continuance of federal aid for highway work and seeking to increase the present appropriation of $89,000,000 to $100,000,000.

Governor Fuller said he could not accept the presidency with a good conscience because of his opposition to "paternalism of the part of the federal government at Washington."

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today
By Idah McGlone Gibson

Cleo Madison, entertaining a few friends, reads from her grandmother's quaint, modest diary. The flapper friends are thunder-struck at its quaintness and suppressed desires. When the girls leave, Cleo plans her elopement with Paul Armstrong, U. S. A., a boyhood sweetheart. None the less, she indulges in a petting party with Chick Adams that evening. Chick is wealthy and Cleo's parents wish her to marry him; so does Chick. Paul's parents, also social climbers who have lost their money, wish Paul to marry Connie Terhune, very rich and in love with Paul. Despite these desires of the parents and Cleo's wanderings as to whether she really does love Paul, the two are married. Almost immediately Cleo begins to learn that marriage is not altogether a path of roses. However, the parents are reconciled to the marriage and the young couple depart for the army post, to which Paul is assigned. On the train Cleo has an allegorical dream which indicates the problems she will have to face. When the newlyweds arrive at the post, Paul is assigned to duty at once and leaves Cleo, who knows nothing of house-keeping, to shift for herself during the day. Johnson, a "stricker" detailed to Paul's quarters, helps out economically as Cleo is able to serve tea when Col. Beldon, the commanding officer, comes to pay his respects.

Rita Thordike, supposed innamorata of Col. Beldon, calls. Cleo likes her. The colonel is not clever enough to ensnare Cleo. Paul warns Cleo about the colonel and Rita. This precipitates a quarrel. And Cleo loses her temper, just so. Cleo picks up much gossip about the colonel, who is a woman chaser, and Rita Thordike—but she likes Rita immensely.

THE DINNER BEGINS. When we arrived at the mess hall it looked to me as though all the officers of the United States army and their wives were there. Evidently the whole post had turned out to welcome Paul and me. It was worse than one of mother's receptions. I was much amazed to see the looks of surprise on the women's faces when Rita and I came in together. "I had begun to think you were not coming at all, Mrs. Thordike," as my husband went away this morning," said one catty individual—a woman with watery eyes and swollen nose that she tried to make less noticeable with white wash. The nose looked like a lighthouse painted white. "Great Scotland and the British Isles," I exclaimed before Mrs. Thordike could answer or the lady in question could be introduced to me. "Is it the unwritten law of the post that a wife must stay at home when her husband is away on duty? The next thing in order will be for a soldier's widow to be burned with him when he falls in battle and is brought home on his shield."

"If this is the rule at this post I shall use all my influence and I shall expect you to use yours, too," Col. Beldon, to get Paul transferred as soon as possible. The colonel smiled and remarked that Lieutenant Armstrong had effectively blocked any hope of being transferred to any other post when he married me. I saw a meaning smile from the first cat to another hard-boiled lady at the colonel's obvious flattery. I knew as well as though they had said it out loud that they had seen the colonel call on me that afternoon and they had made up their minds that Rita Thordike was going to be displaced by me. I glanced at Rita and to my surprise I thought she was a little kinder than when she came in. There was a troubled look in her eyes. My heart went out to her, for that first day at the post had given me a taste of what a girl might find among a lot of jealous army women. Rita had evidently found out early what these women could do to her and when she stepped afterward that her husband was not what she thought him to be she had no one to go to for advice or consolation. Then and there I determined that neither the fascinating colonel nor the feminine contingent of the post would make me do things, either by flattery or fear, that I did not want to do. I saw that Rita Thordike had pleased no one, not even herself, and because I was innately selfish and had always been so, I made up my mind that there would be at least one person satisfied if it were only myself.
