ENFORCEMENT OF LAW TOPIC OF CONFERENCE

county school superintendent, and a well known worker in the county W. C. T. U., spoke for 15 minutes on the subject "The Woman Citizen, stressing the importance of the cooperation of women in-law enforcement.

This was followed by an open forum led by Mr. Stewart, who briefly summed up the work of the Flying Squadron, and the necessity of closer cooperation in law enforcement on the part of the citizens of the country.

The Flying Squadron has visited every state in the union, and has spoken in every capital city. They have made addresses in 12,811 cities since 1923, and are making a vigorous campaign throughout the entire country.

Miss Brown in the afternoon meeting emphasized the local responsibilities.

"There was a let down in the efforts of our prohibition workers immediately following the adoption of the 18th amendment," the speaker said. "It seemed to be the general sentiment that prohibition had now been provided by a vote of the people and that the federal government would provide the enforcement of the laws.

"This the government has done in a large way. The importation, the wholesale bootlegging, manufacture and other sweeping phases of the law enforcement have been taken care of by the government, but they ask and rightly so, the aid of the local governments in apprehending minor violators.

"Local responsibility does not end with the election of dry Congressmen. Many communication elect dry officials to fill the national offices, and then select wet sheriffs and wet mayors. Local governments must do their part also and, in fact, this is the policy as recently outlined by President Coolidge.

"Local responsibility is the place where the wets have made their only gains. Our Congress has more dry members than ever before, but local communities still continue to elect wet officers."

Miss Brown also took up several phases of the work of the Flying Squadron Foundation, which has been incorporated for the past ten years, and detailed some of the pleas of that organization for the future.

Mr. Stewart spoke during the early part of the forenoon at Sutherlin, returning in time to lead the open forum, where a number of various problems were discussed.

Tonight Miss Brown will speak at the Community Church in Oakland, making it necessary to change the evening program in Roseburg slightly, as she will be unable to return in time to speak here tonight.

Tonight's program at the local Baptist Church will start at 8 o'clock with Rev. H. E. Mow, presiding.

Mr. Neuner's speech at the afternoon session, was an urgent plea for closer cooperation of the public with the officers and a warning to law enforcing authorities that they must obey the laws themselves, and take extreme care in the method in which their evidence is gathered. In part Mr. Neuner said:

"My remarks are based entirely upon my experience with the State of Oregon, dating back to the time of local option, and bringing law enforcement through these different eras down to the present time. In other words, we began with the elimination of the saloons by local option, passing from that law to the home rule law, and from home rule to limited importation, and from the latter to the bone dry law and the Volstead act.

"The primary necessity for honest law enforcement requires that the law enforcing officer, be he sheriff, constable, marshal, national prohibition officer, prosecuting attorney, or the judge upon the bench, be sincere, practice what he preaches. The trouble with law enforcement has been in the past that we at times find an officer no matter how low or how high, in the affairs of state, that would like to violate the law himself and punish the other fellow for doing no more than he, the officer himself, does or has done. This of itself brings the law in disrepute, and rightly so, and creates a disrespect for the law, and necessarily brings the censure of the public, and finally creates such a sentiment that is reflected through the public press, and does not tend to aid wholesome law enforcement.

"The enforcing officer should not violate the law himself in order to be able to accomplish his purpose. He must make allowances and be reasonable. The manufacturer and the bootleggers should be his game, and he should not act until he is morally certain that he has respectable evidence sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty. By doing this he will create a wholesome sentiment and respect for the law and eventually, when the sentiment has become crystallized, we will have people report violations of the law rather than have them shun the law and commit perjury, when they are called and sworn to tell the truth in a prosecution for the violation of the prohibition law.

"There is no difference between the enforcement of the state law and the Volstead act. If anything, the federal court is more prone to scrutinize the manner in which the national prohibition officer gathers his evidence. Therefore there is more dignity and perhaps less accusation toward the enforcing of the Volstead act by the National prohibition officers, than there is of a common police and other minor officers, and if the federal officers do not obey the law in making search and seizure, or conduct themselves above suspicion, the Federal court is likely to look upon the evidence unlawfully obtained with disfavor.

"Law enforcement does not necessarily mean the enforcement of the prohibition law. In other words, this law should not be singled out above others. All the laws should be enforced, as a wholesale disrespect for the law, or violations of the law, tends to undermine the very foundation of our government, and it is a primary duty of every good citizen of this great land of ours to see that all laws are enforced, and to that end, we should pledge ourselves in order that our time-honored institution of free government shall be preserved and endure."

LOS ANGELES LYRIC CLUB VISITS CITY

Two autobusses filled with members of the Women's Lyric club of Los Angeles arrived in Roseburg this afternoon, en route to their homes in the south after attending the convention of Federated Music Clubs in Portland. While in the city the women proved themselves to be staunch boosters for southern California and distributed much literature to bystanders. Several local youngsters retailed by rushing to the chamber of commerce where they secured a number of the booster booklets and handed to the fair visitors from the south. They admitted that it was a "fair exchange" and stuffed the literature in their suitcases for future perusal.
