SHEPHERD TAKES STAND TO MAKE HIS OWN DEFENSE

contention of a motive for the alleged murder. He brought out that "Billy" had directed the Northern Trust Company to dispose of the Shepherd-McClintock home, and then read from Shepherd's letter to the girl:

"Things have come along like a cyclone since seeing you at noon. Cannot go into all of the details. The deal came to a head, and broke me flat. Absolutely bankrupt; no hope for the future. I think that I will close my office here and drift away from it all."

"What was that deal," asked Crowe.

"That was a lie, was it?"

"It was," replied Shepherd and the prosecutors "that's all" ended the examination, Shepherd said he had advised "Billy" to sell the home place.

Details of the conversation were left out, however, when the state's attorney objected to relating a talk with a man now dead.

"Judge Crowe asked you whether or not you had any medicine bottles out there and your answer was 'not in that room.' Did you have medicine bottles in other parts of the house?" asked Stewart.

"Did you have a laboratory anywhere about the premises?"

"I did," was the reply.

Judge Crowe asked you whether or not you considered it ethical for a lawyer in a judiciary capacity to draw a will, and you answered you did not, isn't that true?"

"Yes."

"Were you in any fiduciary capacity with reference to that will?"

"Only as foster father of the boy."

"And in whose request did you act as lawyer?"

"At his."

"I object to that—a conversation with a dead man," interjected Crowe, as the defense sought to bring out what "Billy" had said.

"All right, that is all. That's our case," replied Stewart.

"State rests," stated Mr. Crowe and after 12 days the presentation of evidence was ended.

CHICAGO, June 23.—William Darling Shepherd took the witness stand today to strike the chief blow in his defense of the charges that he used typhoid bacilli to slay his millionaire foster son, William Nelson McClintock.

A crowded room of spectators who had fought for admission on this day of days of the five weeks of the trial, strained forward, tensely as Shepherd was called.

A great mass of a man, wide and of stocky build, curly white hair, his face chalky white with its prison pallor, Shepherd ambled leisurely to the witness box.

"Did you murder 'Billy' McClintock?" asked William Scott Stewart, Shepherd's chief counsel, after the usual identifying questions.

"I did not," Shepherd replied in a firm, well modulated voice. The defense attorney took Shepherd through each charge in the indictment of 22 counts covering the death of McClintock by poison, germs and an "unknown manner." In each instance the defendant answered a firm "I did not."

In three minutes, Shepherd's general denial of each and every accusation against him had been formally entered and Stewart sat down with a remark, "take the witness" to the prosecution.
