HEALTH BULLETIN
(State Board of Health)

Regarding four deaths from diphtheria in New York, none of the patients received antitoxin earlier than the third day of the disease. Of three more children who died, one was not seen by a physician for six days after the disease started, another for four days and the third for "several days." Reports such as these are very common, and are of great importance in view of the many small outbreaks of diphtheria in Oregon lately.

ELKS, ATTENTION!

All Elks going to the convention at Portland desiring reservations for rooms please notify the secretary at once.

to failure of doctor to make early diagnosis, 12 to insufficient amount of antitoxin used and only six probably unavoidable.

It does not hurt to give antitoxin occasionally in a case which is not diphtheria. It is often delayed to delay until an absolute diagnosis can be made.

Diphtheria antitoxin has been in use for almost 30 years, yet in Oregon, in 1924, 197 deaths from diphtheria were reported, and there were probably more. How many of these deaths were necessary and how many could have been avoided? It has been shown that when antitoxin is given on the first day of the disease, only 22 per cent of the cases die, while by the second day the percentage has risen to 7.6. If the antitoxin is delayed till the third day, 17 out of each hundred die, and the percentage rises to 24 for the fourth and 34 each for the fifth and sixth days. This gives some idea of the importance of immediate attention.

The germ of diphtheria lives only a small area of the body, usually in the throat, mouth or nose. The damage is done by a poison, or toxin, which it manufactures and which is carried all over the body by the blood. This poison attacks the tissues of the body, notably the nervous system and the heart muscle, accounting for the paralysis often following diphtheria and the frequent deaths from heart failure following exertion after the disease seems to be over.

Antitoxin is an antidote to the poison, destroying it as it is passing thru the body, before it can attack the body tissues. After the toxin has once attacked the body, antitoxin can no longer neutralize it, for the damage is done. Therefore the antitoxin must be given early enough to forestall damage of the body by the toxin. Antitoxin is a perfectly normal substance, which is formed by all bodies infected with diphtheria. What we do is to supply an extra amount, to supplement that which is naturally being formed, but which is formed too slowly to prevent damage to the system and possible death.

Diphtheria is dangerous but most curable at the start. Call a doctor at once if the child has sore throat or suspicious symptoms.

Antitoxin is a natural product and can do no harm. Delay in administration can and does.

The doctor must think of this:

1. Out of 75 deaths from diphtheria analyzed in Chicago recently, 36 were probably due to failure to call a doctor early enough. 27

Control of Peach Root Borers.
By R. W. Cooney.

The true peach root borer and its companion borer, the flat headed, can be held in check upon young trees under three years old by applying the whitewash formula as outlined in Station Circular 39. Life history of these pests can be reviewed in Farmers' Bulletin 1065 and 1246. It is good business to know something of the maneuvers of the pest to be controlled.

The work of whitewashing the young trees should be completed by July first of this year. Control of borers upon pruned and peach trees over three years of age can best be done by the use of 1 to 2 ounces of P-Z benzene crystals applied to the base of the tree about August 15th. The work of applying these gas crystals is fully set forth in Farmers' Bulletin 1246. Protection of the trees lies wholly in prevention.

AN OPERATION RECOMMENDED

Avoided by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Los Angeles, Cal.—"I cannot give too much praise to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me. My mother gave it to me when I was a girl 17 years old, and since then I have taken it when I feel run down or tired. I took it for three months before my two babies were born for I suffered with my back and it helped me a lot. The doctor told me at one time that I would have to have an operation. I thought I would try Pinkham's, as I had it, first. In two months I was all right and had no operation. I firmly believe Pinkham's cured me. Every one who gives me after that remarked that I looked so well. I only have to take medicine occasionally, not but I always keep a couple of bottles by me. I recommend it to women who speak to me about their health. I have also used your Sanative Wash and it is very much."—Mrs. E. Gould, 4009 East Side Boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal.

Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised.

The bride was lovely in a gown of silk crepe de chine, of pastel blue, with small roses of pink and blue, and carried a bouquet of pink and white sweet peas. She was attended by Miss Gracia Thornton, of Eugene, who was charming in a pink taffeta gown. The groom was attended with pink and white roses and stood in baskets and bowls, and immediately following the ceremony dinner was served to the guests at a table centered with a bride and groom's cake.

C. A. Lockwood Motor Co.

Cleo Madison, entertaining friends, reads from her grandmother's quaint, modest diary. The happier friends are thunderstruck at its quaintness and suppressed desires. When the girls leave, Cleo plans her elopement with Paul Armstrong, U. S. A., a boyhood sweetheart. None the less, she indulges in a petting party with Chick Adams that evening. Chick is wealthy and Cleo's parents wish her to marry him; so does Chick. Paul's parents, also social climbers who have lost the money with Paul to marry Johnson. Johnson is very rich and in love with Paul. Despite these desires of the parents and Cleo's wonderings as to whether she really does love Paul, the two are married. Almost immediately Cleo begins to learn that marriage is not altogether a path of roses. However, the parents are reconciled to the marriage and the young couple depart for the army post to which Paul is assigned. On the train Cleo has an allegorical dream which indicates the problems she will have to face. When the newlyweds arrive at the post, Paul is assigned to duty at once and leaves Cleo, who knows nothing of housekeeping, to shift for herself during the day. Johnson, a "striker" detailed to Paul's quarters, helps out enormously so Cleo is able to serve tea when Col. Beldon, the commanding officer, comes to pay his respects. The colonel, a "lady killer," has become involved in compromising circumstances with Rita Thorndike, whom Cleo likes immediately. Rita is absolutely innocent, but is having a hard time of it, especially as her husband is a no-good rotter. Cleo learns all about Rita and things rapidly draw toward a crisis. Such a crisis that Rita leaves the post, secretly to join a vaudeville troupe, a job which Cleo gets for her. Rita assumes the name of Rita Thorndike, and the post is agog with gossip and wonder.

Paul comes from an all-night poker party, drunk and disagreeable.

FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS

When I asked Paul if it was his intention to make a night of it once in every seven, he just looked at me as if to say, "Of course I do." I returned the look with interest. Neither of us said anything for almost a half a minute. It was the clashing of two wills fighting as he had never fought before for supremacy.

Paul's eyes were the first to drop as he said, "Well, if you want me to lose $500."

"What do you mean—$500?" My heart almost stopped beating as I asked the question. Was it possible that my husband had lost $500 at one sitting?

"Well," he explained in an injured tone as though I were in some way to blame for it all, "well, the only way I can get back the $500 I lost last night is to play again."

"Do you mean to tell me, Paul Armstrong, that you lost $500 at cards last night and that you intend to play again as soon as possible to try and get it back?"

Paul looked up at me furiously. His mouth was very boyish and his eyes very miserable. For a moment I felt sorry for him. I recognized that maternal instinct which is always in every woman's heart. I suppressed it as quickly as possible, however.

"What else is there to be done, Cleo?"

"Well, you certainly can get up and go about your business."

"Why, why it's not time to get up yet. Lovell hasn't sounded. I will be very soon. I've been up for hours. We have a lot to throw out, Paul. I don't want to quarrel with you, but I can't worry about things as I did all last night. Oh, Paul, I don't want to be unhappy. I want to be like we were when you used to come back from West Point. I want to dance and go scotching about in my little roadster. I want to laugh with you and at you and say smart things that will make you laugh. I want my birthright of youth. I want to be young. Now all at once I seem very, very old. Nothing seems bright and joyous. I'm like a squirrel in a cage, going round and round and never getting anywhere and the worst of it is I put myself there."

"Say, Cleo, is there any bromseltzer in the house? Go and get me some, will you."

"I don't think there is any," I said quickly. That was not true, but I wanted to make him as physically unhappy as I was mentally. At that moment I hated Paul, but more than I hated him, I hated that thing I had called love, that thing I thought I could not live without. It had been so treacherous, it had held out such wonderful dreams and all in the moment it had withheld its magic. I was awake and my heart was constricted with misery and pain.

"I think Johnson will be here in a minute and I'll have him cook you some bacon and eggs." Paul's stomach visibly turned over as I hoped it would.

"Hell, Cleo! Can't you be a little decent? Stop talking about food! I wish you'd stop talking altogether. Your soul and my stomach are certainly on the rampage this morning."

I heard Johnson's step downstairs, and went out on the landing.

"Please tell the lieutenant that the Colonel wants him at headquarters at 12 o'clock! Until then he is excused from duty."

"I'll tell him, Johnson," and to myself I added, "and I'll tell him a few more things, too."

"Was that Johnson?" Paul asked as I came in.

"Yes, you are excused from duty until 12."

"Well he should do that. He can expect to take all my money at night as well as all my time the next day."

I had the presence of mind to keep still. My husband had just given me some surprising information. Col. Blakely Heidon was the kind of man who was not ashamed of making a practice of taking his young officer's money in a game of cards.

"I've got to have something to drink. My throat is burning up. Is there any more coffee?" Paul's voice was raspy.

"I'll get you some," I said taking pity on him. He drank a cup of black coffee with one gulp and then looked somewhat surprised.

"Say, Cleo, did you make this coffee? You have learned how quickly haven't you?" There was a tone in his voice I did not like. Did he think I was lying when I had told him I didn't know how to cook?

"Rita Thorndike told me how to make it yesterday. She helped me get the luncheon."

Paul straightened up suddenly.

"Well that's one good deed she has done, at least, but I am afraid my dear, that you will have to forego any further cooking lessons. I learned last night that she is a most undesirable friend for you to have."

"Will you please tell me why?"
