GOVERNMENT TO GET PORTRAIT OF NOTED AMERICAN ARCHITECT

(Associated Press Local Wire.)
HAVANA, July 2.—A portrait of Thomas U. Walter is to be presented by his grandson, Clark Walter, of Havana, to the United States government when Congress convenes in December.
The subject of the portrait was a noted architect who designed the east and west wings of the capitol at Washington under a commission from President Fillmore. He also designed several other public buildings in Washington as well as Girard College in Philadelphia. He died in 1887.

MODERN YOUTH AND THE CHURCH

The following poem by Abba Harness, which reflects religious ideas of many students of evolution, astronomy and other branches of science, appeared in the July issue of the Reality Magazine.

In restless thought the signs we trace
Proclaim the age is near,
When Right shall conquer and of-fense
The tyrants, greed and fear.

Forever in Her wide research
Moves Science on and on,
Her students far beyond the church
To smelt shores are drawn.

Remaining in her stagnant night
The church prolongs her strife
To shroud the all-revealing light
Which Science throws on life.

By aid of Science men unveil
The vast age of the earth,
And find the records which detail
The Bible's pagan birth.

The making of the earth begun
And finished in six days;
God's fatherhood of Mary's son,
Reversing Nature's ways:

Such myths and legends far be-hind
We now begin to leave,
Dogmatic creeds no longer blind
Nor cause us to believe.

A wrathful God sits on a throne,
Dispensing death and blight,
And tortured spirits writhe and scream
In hell-fire's lurid light.

Diviner knowledge shall be won,
The truth the world shall know,
The ancient, white, bewhiskered
One,
The sky-man God must go.

He is receding far away
And crowing vague and dim,
The God, whom thinkers now obey,
Does not resemble Him.

God is supreme, eternal Mind:
He dwells below, above,
His peace is with us and we find
He rules the world by love.

Unlocking Nature's secret door
To God whose laws they learn,
A perfect world, unknown before,
Keen-sighted men discern.

The church shall yet know God
aright
And by His laws abide.
The church and Science shall unite
And progress side by side.

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today
By Idah McGlone Gibson

Cleo Madison, entertaining friends, reads from her grandmother's quaint, modest diary. The happy friends are thunderstruck at its quaintness and suppressed desires. When the girls leave, Cleo plans her elopement with Paul Armstrong, U. S. A., a boyhood sweetheart. None the less, she indulges in a party with Paul and Cleo's parents wish her to marry him; so does Chick Paul's parents, also social climbers who have lost their money with Paul to marry Connie Terhune, very rich and in love with Paul. Despite these desires of the parents and Cleo's wonderings as to whether she really does love Paul, the two are married. Almost immediately Cleo begins to learn that marriage is not altogether a path of roses. However, the parents are reconciled to the marriage and the young couple depart for the army post, to which Paul is assigned. On the train Cleo has an allegorical dream which indicates the problems she will have to face. When the newlyweds arrive at the post, Paul is assigned to duty at once and leaves Cleo, who knows nothing of housekeeping, to shift for herself during the day. Johnson, a "stricker" detailed to Paul's quarters, helps out enormously so Cleo is able to serve tea when Col. Beldon, the commanding officer, comes to pay his respects. The colonel, a "lady killer," has become involved in compromising circumstances with Rita Thordike, whom Cleo likes immediately. Rita is absolutely innocent, but is having a hard time of it, especially as her husband is a no-good rotter. Cleo learns all about Rita and things rapidly draw toward a crisis. Such a crisis that Rita leaves the post, secretly to join a vaudeville troupe, a job which Cleo gets for her. Rita assumes the name of Rieda Thordaldson. The post is agog with gossip and wondering.

Paul comes home from an all-night poker party, drunk and disagreeable. He has lost $500, mostly to the colonel. Cleo is furious, especially as he starts picking on Rita's good name in the morning.

Paul learns of Rita's disappearance and rushes to tell Cleo. He suspects her of helping Rita.

WHERE IS RITA?
"You haven't a very good opinion of the United States army have you, Cleo?" Paul said in a nasty voice.

"I certainly have. I married part of it. Don't be a fool, Paul. You know as well as I that there are good men and bad men in the pay of Uncle Sam just as there are in any other walk of life. But I haven't a very good opinion of Col. Beldon and it riles me when you all censure the woman and let the man go scot free."

"Way, do you know what you told me last night, when you were drunk. You said that Col. Beldon was innocent, that Rita had persecuted him and that she was as guilty as hell. Don't you know, Paul dear, that that old excuse, 'The woman tempted me,' is absolute."

"Why all the camouflage, Cleo? Come across. Come clean. What do you know about this woman's getting out of town? Someone must have helped her and I think it was you. Come on. Tell the truth. What do you know about it?"

"Rita is too clever a woman to confide in anyone if she was going to take a step like the one you say she has. What you tell me worries me. Under the circumstances I think that I would take a nice dose of poison."

"Good God, Cleo! Don't put that idea into the Colonel's head. He is nearly crazy now."

"Serves him right. It's good for him. The only thing that worries me is that I'm afraid the idea may be true."

"Cleo, Cleo, don't talk this way. Do you know what you are doing? Do you know that you are talking about the Colonel? The only way that you can set yourself right, if you know anything at all about this matter, is to go to him and tell him the whole story."

"I don't want to set myself right. Even if I knew I wouldn't tell him. Let him sweat a little. It would do him good."

"If the meantime what of me, Cleo?"

"Lieut. Armstrong are you planning to put me in the place made vacant by Rita Thordike, if she has left, which I don't think she has, for I saw her late yesterday afternoon?"

"My God, Cleo, what are you accusing me of? I'm accusing you of nothing. But I don't like you to ask me that question."

"What question?"

"I don't like you to ask me, 'What of me?' when I tell you that I'm not going to keep my mouth shut about the Colonel."

"But, Cleo, you don't understand."

"I understand perfectly."

"Oh well, if that is the way you feel about it— Paul rushed out and slammed the door."

As Paul slammed the front door Johnson came in the back. "Shall I set your table for tea, Mrs. Armstrong?"

"I don't think so. I'm going over to Mrs. Melborno's."

"You'd better hurry then, Mrs. Armstrong, for I saw the Colonel coming down the street and I think he is coming here. Have you heard of the disappearance of Mrs. Thordike? The whole Post is agog with the gossip."

"Yes, my husband just told me of it, Johnson."

"I hope you will pardon me, Mrs. Armstrong, for referring to the matter but what do you think about it?"

"I don't think she has left town, Johnson. Personally I think the poor woman has been greatly persecuted and I would not be surprised to learn that Rita Thordike had made away with herself."

He looked at me intently. It was a great game we were playing and I thought how much better the private soldier showed up in it than the Colonel of the regiment—how much better sportsman he was. If there was any investigation, he was almost certain to have suspicion rest upon him, but he never batted an eyelid as he answered.

"Yes, I thought that might be a plausible solution to her troubles."

"Then you think she had her troubles, Johnson?"

"Evidently or she wouldn't have disappeared without any one knowing it."

"And no one in the Post does know it?"

"I haven't found any one that does, Mrs. Armstrong. Even the station agent has been questioned and he said he saw no one go through the station."

"Thank God," I said under my breath as the doorbell rang.

"I presume that is Col. Beldon, Mrs. Armstrong. Would you mind answering the door? I'm slipping out the back way."

Tomorrow — Col. Beldon's Second Call.

PROMINENT MAN IS VICTIM OF DEATH

WALLA WALLA, Wash., July 1.—William B. Shaffer, ex-president of the North Pacific Millers' Association, president of the Preston-Shaffer Milling Company of Walla Walla, and of First National Bank of Athena, Ore., and prominent in the business and social life of Southeastern Washington for a quarter of a century, died at his home in Walla Walla about 11 o'clock this morning at the age of 64.

He leaves his wife, a daughter, Mrs. Wilma Roberts of Portland and a sister, Mrs. Kate Armstrong of Seattle, all of whom were at the bedside when the end came.

EDUCATORS ADVOCATE LATIN AS AID TO ENGLISH SPELLING

INDIANAPOLIS, July 2.—(A. P.)—Study of Latin as a means of increasing accuracy in spelling and understanding English words was advocated today by B. L. Ullman, professor of Latin at the University of Chicago, before the American Classical League of the National Educational Association which is in convention here.

Prof. Ullman said a recent investigation had disclosed that the study of Latin in high schools "still shows that remarkable vitality which has ever been the marvel of observers."

More than 50 percent of the English words, he said, are of Latin origin and "seventy-five percent of the most common English words of Latin origin by seventh, eighth and ninth grade pupils are apparently remediable by the use of proper methods in Latin classes."

Alexander L. Bondurant, professor of Latin at the University of Mississippi, said the South today needs well-prepared Latin teachers, as the demand is much greater than the supply.

JAPAN-CHINA AIR ROUTE PLANNED

TOKYO, July 2.—Plans for a regular aerial service between Kagothima and Shanghai are being considered here and probably will be included in a bill to be introduced at the next session of the Diet. It is understood a private syndicate, aided by the government, would operate the air service and at the beginning only mail would be carried. Later, however, arrangements would be made for the transportation of passengers. The proposed route would be Tokyo-Onaka-Kagothima-Dairen-Tientsin-Shanghai, the trip requiring about eight hours flying time.
