HEAT VICTIM RIDES IN REFRIGERATOR CAR

(Associated Press Local Wire.)
ST. PAUL, July 10.—Clad in a dressing gown and with his head swathed in bandage, L. J. Chapman, Kansas City dairyman, ate breakfast here today in his refrigerator car, rubbing elbows with eight tons of ice with which the car is packed.

Mr. Chapman, attended by a physician, is enroute to Isle Royale in upper Lake Superior to escape the Missouri heat which caused his collapse in Kansas City a week ago. His physicians decided it was necessary to relieve him from the heat. The temperature of the car was maintained at 45 degrees. Chapman felt "much better" today. His "private car" was hooked on the Northern Pacific 8:50 train for Duluth where by special arrangement the Booth Steamship line will bring one of its boats to the Northern Pacific docks to take the Chapman party to Isle Royale.

Throughout the trip the railroad companies are giving Chapman's car the right of way.

SHORTAGE IN HORSE FLESH

OLYMPIA, Wash., July 10.—Indicating a possible shortage of horse flesh in the Blue Grass state A. R. Campbell, a merchant of Howell, Ky., has requested biological survey officials here to ship him two carloads of wild ponies from the range of eastern Washington.

Mr. Campbell has learned through Associated Press reports, he declares, that the ponies are so numerous in Washington that an enterprising resident of the horse heaven country is storing them as hog feed and intimates that while horses may be considered "back numbers" in the far west, they still find favor in Old Kentucky. He offers about $2 over the hog feed price for three year olds, or $5 each, provided they are in "good" flesh.

Since the ponies are so wild that few of them have ever been branded, Kentucky riders would probably experience some decidedly new thrills with their western mounts, it is felt here.

The "freedom" of women was never so free as it is now, today, in America.
"As for the reason why girls are more lured now by this freedom than they were formerly—it's all a part of the increasing circle of privileges which women at present enjoy. Don't think I advocate the old restricted life for women. Heaven forbid! But it's nevertheless true that the reason we have women criminals now is because the freedom of women is greater than ever before."
"There's something psychologic and ancestral about it, too. Women formerly was the one who got brutal treatment. She has turned brute now. It wouldn't have been lady-like formerly to shoot a man because he didn't marry you. Today it's almost a matter of course."
"There is, as any one can see, a terrific spirit of recklessness and of restlessness among girls. Crime is not on the increase. It is different. The urge is different. Women are coming into it more and more—it gives them greater self-expression. Yes, really, crime is with young women a form of self-expression."
"One of the greatest evils of the situation, as I see it, and as I have endeavored to show in "Lilies of the Streets," the metropolitan police picture, which I am proud to have sponsored, is that women having these tendencies, so readily become associated with the so-called critical eyes, because it is next to impossible to imagine him attired in anything save the raiment of the modern American cowboy.

lives which has been recorded in the newspapers for many a moon—that of the men and dogs who covered the long trail from Nemana to Nome, carrying the precious serum to relieve a stricken city—is called to mind by the William Fox production "The Hunted Woman." The screen offering booked for a two-day run at the Majestic theatre Friday and Saturday, is adapted from James Oliver Curwood's novel about the vast reaches of the Northland. In this story are depicted the constant Titanic struggles of men against the seemingly insurmountable forces of nature and the final conquest, through almost superhuman endurance and will, of man over raging storms and rough ice-covered fields that impede his progress.
