LAWYERS IN SCOPES CASE PLAN BATTLE

his aides will continue their series of conferences.

The Dayton Ministers association, sponsors of the occasion, expects a great throng to attend the address tomorrow afternoon of William Jennings Bryan, who will speak at the open air auditorium arranged on the court house lawn. The subject of the fundamentalism champion has been announced as "He calleth thee."

Meanwhile the jury of 12 who will be called on to determine the issue of this trial in the Rhea county court, were spending the day at their accustomed vocations under the court's admonition to avoid assemblies and public gatherings and to engage in no discussion of the Scopes case. Only two of the jurors reside in Dayton.

DAYTON, Tenn., July 11.—With the first preliminary steps cleared away, including the selection of a jury, counsel for both the defense and prosecution in the Scopes evolution case today planned conferences to consider the next move in the game of legal chess. No session of the trial was scheduled today, the defense having asked for a day to consider angles of its case.

The jury is composed of nine farmers, one school teacher and farmer combined, one fruit grower and one shipping clerk. Only one is not a church member.

With indications of a battle in the offing, the defense meeting was to determine upon what grounds it would base its plea for admission into the evidence the testimony of experts, scientific and religious lines, with the announced intention of attempting to show that the theory of evolution does not conflict with the Biblical account of creation.

While they were seeking a firm basis for their contention that such testimony would be relevant, prosecution attorneys were drawing up their battle lines to withstand the expected attack.

Indications today were that they would attempt to have this testimony introduced as a matter for the information of the presiding judge, to be dealt with afterward as he sees fit.

Prosecution attorneys on the other hand consider the case one in which only the question of whether or not John Thomas Scopes taught that man descended from a lower form of animal was involved. Basing their contention upon this view they have announced their intention of making a supreme effort to prevent the trial from leaving the legal course and trailing into a religious and scientific controversy.

"The only issue," Attorney General Stewart said last night, "is whether or not Scopes taught that man descended from a lower form of animal."

The administration of the oath to the jury Monday, followed by the reading of the indictment and the arraignment of the defendant will bring the opposing counsel together for their first real clash in the trial.

Symptoms of such a clash were revealed several times yesterday in the objections of Mr. Stewart to the manner of questioning pursued by Clarence Darrow in examining prospective jurors. Mr. Stewart, both at a brief exchange of views of opposing attorneys and during the selection of the jury, objected strenuously to the injection into the trial of anything which would indicate that it would develop into an attempt to reconcile the theory of evolution with the Bible.

In a statement to the Associated Press last night he said:

"Since the defense has made known its position concerning the competency of the proposed evidence of scientists tending to show that there is no conflict between evolution and the Bible, I think it but right that our position should also be definitely stated and that it might be understood that we intend to back our program as vigorously as we know how."

Continuing he said it was his understanding that Scopes would not deny he taught the high school students that man descended from a lower order of animal.

"If this be true," he said, "he is guilty of the violation of the law and all the evidence of the scientists within his reach cannot save him. The law itself says that it shall not be taught to the students in the public schools that man descended from a lower order of animal."

Whether or not scientists might be brought into court to expound the belief that man descended from a lower order of animal by the process of God's creation, he felt would make no difference, declaring the law says such cannot be taught.

Production of expert witnesses by both sides, he said, "would lead to a never-ending proposition and would in the end be but a babble of tongues."

TEACHERS ASSOCIATION ARE BACK OF SCOPES.

CHICAGO, July 11.—The American Federation of Teachers, in a letter to John T. Scopes, defendant in the Tennessee anti-evolution trial, made public today, asserts the public school is on trial at Dayton and that the "danger can only be removed by the fiscal, if not the immediate success" of the defense contentions, "in behalf of the freedom of education."

A recent convention of the organization which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, resolved to support Mr. Scopes and all others who may oppose legislation similar to the Tennessee law prohibiting instruction in the theory of evolution in the public schools.

The letter mailed yesterday, expressed the view that the establishment of the principles embodied in the Tennessee law would replace with "hypothesis and error" the professional spirit of scholars.

come that endangered life."

SYRACUSE, N. Y., July 11.—A blow on the head with a war club in the hands of an Indian on a lonely South American mountain changed the whole course of life for Philip Knapp, youthful Syracuse boy, being sought in connection with the murder of Louis Panella, Minnesota taxicab driver, according to friends here.

In grammar school and high school here, local records show young Knapp was a brilliant scholar and active in the student life. Finishing his high school course in three and a half years, he entered Syracuse University just before the war, but left to enlist in the navy in 1920.

While returning from a Pacific cruise with a naval vessel he stopped off in South America with a friend and climbed a mountain to on the mound.

The two were attacked by natives, Knapp's friends said, and the Syracuse boy received a blow on the head, fracturing his skull, causing illness for months, and on his return to Syracuse underwent an operation for removal of a piece of bone in his brain, but since that time he always has been noted as eccentric.
