Engagement of Visiting Girl Announced

Misses Alice and Emma Ueland jointly entertained at "Idler's Jug" Tuesday evening, announcing the engagement of Miss Clitabe Meek, of Eugene, a guest this week at the Ueland home, to Mr. Glynn Ledbetter, of Alexandria, Louisiana. The guests were entertained with boating on the Umpqua river, and music. Miss Naomi Scott, of Portland, gave several delightful violin selections. A picnic supper followed, and later in the evening each guest withdrew a small scroll, tied with pink ribbon, from a basket cleverly decorated in pink, announcing the engagement.

Bodie Home Scene of Picnic Saturday

The home of Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Bodie, who reside about three miles west of Roseburg near the Umpqua river, was the scene of a pleasant day Saturday, when a number of their friends, motored to that cool spot and held a picnic. The afternoon was spent in games and swimming, and pitching of horseshoes was a diversion for the men throughout the day. Later a picnic dinner was spread under the trees on the spacious lawn of the Bodie home. About thirty Roseburg people participated in the day's pleasure.

Roy Roadman, who formerly made his home in this city, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. George Tostee, of Los Angeles, arrived here the first of the week, and have been guests at the home of Mr. Roadman's mother. The party is motoring to Seattle and British Columbia, and will also stop in Portland to attend the Elk's convention.

THEATRES

Liberty Theatre

The most daring expose of modern life and its criminal dangers ever shown on the screen is billed at the Liberty Theatre in Roseburg for tomorrow, Monday and Tuesday. The picture is based on the actual experiences of Mary E. Hamilton, New York's famous and first pitiless woman. It pierces the hidden pathway of crime; revealing the hideous face that hides behind the smiling mask of the criminal who preys on women—human virtues entrapping innocent and careless young creatures. In criminal coils and webs of wickedness. Sensational, enthralling scenes that you've never seen before; unheard-of happenings that you wouldn't believe possible; dastardly plots conceived in evil minds for the undoing of the unwary. Smashing drama! Piercing pathos! Splendid entertainment! The two big favorites, Johnnie Walker and Virginia Lee Corbin are starred. If you don't see another picture this year, you must see this one!

Antlers Theatre

Funnier than "Changing Husband"—that's what Paramount claims for "Forty Winks," the latest production by Paul Iribe and Frank Urson, the screen's only directorial "team." Viola Dana, Theodore Roberts and Raymond Griffith are featured in the leading roles of the picture which was adapted for the screen by Bertram Millhauser from the unusually popular stage play, "Lord Chumley," by David Belasco and Henry C. DeMille. The story is a melodramatic comedy with no small amount of mystery tossed in for good measure and tells of a titled Englishman, engaged to marry a beautiful American girl. Her brother, a lieutenant in the navy, loses some valuable papers and Lord Algeron Cholomondeley, called Chumley for short, goes about retrieving them, thus winning the girl and saving the family name. "Forty Winks" is just one big laugh after another. At the Antlers theatre Sunday.

Majestic Theatre

While the William Fox production, "No Mother to Guide Her," is essentially a gripping drama of life in the raw, it has its humorous moments even as the most serious life now and then gets its smile. The picture will open a 3-day engagement at the Majestic theatre on Sunday. The story deals with the lives of two girls, one a daughter of the rich, the other penniless. Their experiences combine to present a powerful story in which evil is countered by good despite almost insurmountable obstacles. Genevieve Tobin and Dolores Rousseau have the leading feminine roles, with J. D. Walsh in a prominent part opposite. The balance of the cast is unusually efficient and the picture has been well directed by Charles Moran. The story carries an appeal to every home, particularly to the mothers and daughters.

Lillian May Erbe of Philadelphia, runner-up in the national beauty contest last year, has the consolation of being proclaimed-queen of beauty at the carnival held the other day at Sea Isle City, N. J.

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today

By Idah McGlone Gibson

Cleo Madison, entertaining friends, reads from her mother's diary. The flapper friends are thunderstruck by its quaintness and suppressed desires. Soon after Cleo eaves with her boyhood sweetheart Lieut. Paul Armstrong, U. S. A. Cleo's parents wished her to marry wealthy Chick Adams; so did Chick. Paul's parents wished him to marry the rich and willing Connie Terhune. Cleo begins to learn that marriage is not a path of roses almost at once. The young couple departs for the army post. On the train Cleo has an allegorical dream indicating the problems she will have to face. On arriving, undomestic Cleo is able to serve tea to the "lady-kill" colonel, through the help of Johnson, a striker. Col. Hildon has become involved in compromising circumstances with Rita Thordike. Rita is innocent; her husband is a crook. Rita secretly leaves the post to join a vaudeville troupe, a job which Cleo says for her. Rita assumes the name of Rhonda Thordison. Finally, after the colonel has frantically bounced in and out to inquire about Rita, Cleo receives a telegram from Rita, or Rhonda. Cleo decides to keep everything about Rita secret.

"I wonder why Johnson didn't come and tell me about what you had been doing?" said Paul. "I'll have him jugged for this."

"Great Scotland and the British Isles! Since when has an officer of the United States army been able to jug one of his men for helping a woman in distress?"

There was a look on Paul's face of discomfiture. "You know I didn't mean that, Cleo, but I was very angry. Johnson should have come to me and told me."

"You mean that you would like him to beat tales?"

"Oh, shut up, can't you. You know that I don't mean the things I am saying, but you make me so angry. What I am trying to get across is, that both you and Johnson should have made me a confidant of your plans."

"So you did engineer that getaway, did you. I expected as much. Especially as I got this wire a few minutes ago."

Paul pulled a yellow envelope out of his pocket. It read: "Chick Adams furnishing money for vaudeville turn which Ernest Weiman and Evan Chatworth are going to put on the Orpheum circuit, Womans from out of town. Get in this morning. I went down with the boys to meet her. Young, pretty, blonde. Name Rheda Thordish. Evidently Swedish. Chick says she is a friend of Cleo's. Can't understand why Cleo did not write me about her. Is she a friend of yours? Regards, Connie."

"Of course, as soon as I got this telegram I came home immediately to ask you what it meant and you can imagine my feelings to find you shaking hands with an enlisted man of my company as though ratifying some secret agreement."

"Why did you not let me into this secret, Cleo? Why must you ask an old lover and every man's eye upon to get Mrs. Thordike out of this place when you had me to help you? Naturally, as I am your husband I should have been the one you should go to."

"Paul! want to ask you one question. Would you have helped me and kept still about it?"

Paul did not answer, for he knew he would not have done so. "Was there any reason why I should have told you when just a little while before you had absolutely commanded me to never talk to the lady again? You know very well that if I had said anything about this to you we would have had a perfectly furious quarrel and before the thing was finished the whole story would have been in everybody's mouth and that poor Rita would probably be filling a suicide's grave."

"I would like to say right now that I am perfectly furious with Connie Terhune. She knows that I had not told you this because, woman-like, her intuition told her that I would not have aided Chick's help if you had been in it."

"Never mind, Connie. Come across some across! Tell me what you'd did," commanded Paul.

"Remember, I'm only your wife, not your regiment. You can change the tone of your voice when you speak to me, can't you? What is it you want to know?"

"About Mrs. Thordike's going away."

"That's not my business to tell. If Mrs. Thordike had wanted the Post to know she would probably have given a farewell party to her friends."

"Don't be sarcastic, Cleo. I know without your intimating it that Mrs. Thordike did not have a friend at the Post with the exception of yourself, that is why I suspected you of engineering the whole business. It's like your devilish cleverness. I wish you would me some of that cleverness that seemed to me though, I don't seem to find anywhere that you stopped to think what all this was going to do to me. It will probably make Colonel Hildon my enemy for life."

"If Colonel Hildon becomes your enemy for something that is done without your knowledge he is even less of a man than I thought him."

"Cleo, you don't understand."

"I am beginning to think you are right. I am beginning to think that I do not understand any man, not even my own husband."

"You seem to have no trouble, however, in making any other man wish to understand you; witness this telegram and Johnson."

"Look here, Paul Armstrong. I am not going to rest under your insinuating intimations any longer. Here's the story, and you can blazon it to your precious Colonel and the whole Post if you want to, but I warn you unless you want to show up as about the poorest sap that ever lived, I don't care if you had better keep pretty still about the whole business."

"You know just the position that poor Rita was in. She was perhaps the unhappiest woman on earth and she was put in a position here where every woman's tongue was against her and every man's eye upon her with an insulting question."

Next—Cleo Tells Paul.

Miss Naomi Scott, of Portland, has been a house guest of Miss Helen Casey, who resides on the corner of Blakely and Benson streets.

Mrs. George K. Quine and daughter, Miss Evelyn Quine, have gone to Bandon beach, where they will spend the remainder of the summer.

ONLY FOUR FROCKS NEEDED FOR THAT SIX WEEKS' TOUR OF EUROPE

BETTY BRONSON IN ENSEMBLE SUIT OF BLACK SATIN & BLACK & WHITE FOULARDE. DINNER DRESS OF BEIGE LACE, OVER CORAL SLIP & FUCHSIA FLOWERS. RIGHT: KNITTED DRESS FOR TRAVEL.

FOR the girl who is going to tour Europe in six weeks this summer, "in a valise" but four frocks are needed.

A cloth, daytime frock; an ensemble suit of satin or silkcrepe, semi-dressy; a knitted dress, and a dinner frock.

The knitted frock the girl traveler will find indispensable for the boat trip, and for long train rides from country to country. It wrinkles not, neither does it muss. It always looks fresh, and requires no little care as any garment known. It can be packed for days, and shows no creases when unpacked.

The cloth dress is splendid for daytime and sightseeing. It might be of abson, such as Betty Bronson wears in the photo above, at the right. This frock is straight lined, with a single row of buttons down the front and a narrow pleated collar. Of course there is an inverted box pleat in front. The frock is a gray one, and the short coat that accompanies it is of black and white plaid.

The ensemble suit brought along on the trip should be a semi-dressy type, as is seen in the photo at the left. The dress in the case is of black satin, and black and white printed silk (the fouldard). A costume like this, fit in for late afternoon, teas, parties, informal dining, street, cafes and theatres. Miss Bronson wears the ensemble too.

Both these photographed frocks she wears on her many trips from season to season, in her new and amusing Paramount photoplay, "Are Parents People?" In this story she spends her summers with one parent and her winters with the mother, so she feels she is an authority on what-to-wear-for-travel!

The ideal dinner frock, she feels, is the lace one, worn over a colored slip. Her idea is sketched above. It shows a beige-lace dress worn over a faint, coral slip, with fuchsia, flat roses over the hip. The neck and sleeves are bound in coral. The dress is cut straight, with a flare below the knees. A choker of coral is an important accessory.

The lace frock is a good one for packing, too. It doesn't rumple or crease any more than a knitted garment.
