exercise by one state department, "of any of the powers belonging to either of the others."

Quote U. S. Amendments The fifth and sixth amendments to the constitution of the United States which set forth that no person shall be "deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law," and that, "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person, within its jurisdiction, the equal protection of the laws."

The first amendment to the constitution of the United States which insures that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of a religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

The fourteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States providing that "no state shall make or enforce any law which abridges the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction, the equal protection of the laws."

Mild Clash Develops. During Mr. Neal's argument, the attorney-general moved that the jury retire. This developed a mild clash between Attorney-General Stewart and Clarence Darrow. Mr. Darrow at first said, "we do not object." Mr. Stewart replied, "It doesn't matter whether you do or not. The court is the judge of that." After a general exchange of comments from attorneys, Dudley Field Malone and Arthur Garfield Hays, the court ordered that the jury be permitted to retire.

"We know the legislature represents the majority in Tennessee, but we represent the minority," said Mr. Neal in concluding. Arthur G. Hays followed in speaking for the defense, applying himself at the outset to a discussion of the indefiniteness of the law, as he saw it. He devoted himself to the words "teach" and "theory" in the act of the legislature, declaring that the language is indefinite and falls short of clarity in saying how far a teacher can or cannot go. He also claimed the act is not proper under the police power of the state. He read a hypothetical statute he would have the legislature enact, prohibiting the teaching of heliocentric theory and making the punishment death.

Says Act Unreasonable. The speaker claimed that the evolution theory was established as reasonably as the heliocentric theory. "An unreasonable restriction upon liberty of the individual," he said, in giving his conception of the act. He also asked the court to reserve his decision on the motion to quash until he had heard the evidence in the case. He suggested the court and jurors needed to be informed on the subject of evolution, the Bible and other things. Former Attorney-General Ben G. McKenzie made the first argument for the state, defending the constitutionality of the act in question. He said religion could not be taught and neither could a doctrine. The veteran mountain lawyer used many smiles and colloquialisms in his plea. "Now, Mr. Hays," the aged Tennessee lawyer drawled, "has dragged in his proposed statute which would hang a man on the courthouse lawn, an act not nearly as much akin to the evolution law as he says we are kin to the monkey."

Mr. Malone filed an objection with the court to Mr. McKenzie's argument, suggesting that it was not being restricted to the issue. He also suggested that the speaker not refer to the geographical section of the country from which the attorneys came, saying: "We are here as American citizens in a court of justice."

"Why, you don't know me," replied Mr. McKenzie. "I love you, love you all," adding: "There are no hard feelings so far." Mr. Malone replied: "And I'm for you." Sue K. Hicks, speaking for the state in opposition to the motion to quash, defended the school rooms and the wisdom of the law in attempting to protect them.

DAYTON, Tenn., July 13.—A snuff hat permeated the Rhea county court room as the second day of the trial of John T. Scopes began today. Electric fans, lacking Friday when everybody sweated, had been installed and played about in an effort to make the atmospheric conditions more endurable.

Judge Raulston, taking judicial cognizance of the weather, had changed his suit of blue woolen to one of linen.

Blue uniformed Captain Perkins of the Chattanooga police, with menacing expression on his face, stood by the judge's bench and waved a fan.

William Jennings Bryan, collarless and without a coat, had a tightly filled leather brief case as he moved to the prosecution counsel table. He seemed prepared for argument.

Benton McMillin of Nashville, former Tennessee governor, entered and began shaking hands all around the room.

Photographers were climbing like monkeys over the seats and benches and shinning up window projections, snapping their cameras at the occupants of the rafted area. A movie cameraman ground out several celluloid feet of Clarence Darrow on one side and Mr. Bryan on the other.

The jurymen sat with hands on chins, taking panoramic views of the expanse of faces. The opening of court was delayed several minutes while the picture taking brigade shot off its ammunition. The auditorium was again crowded to capacity and scores stood in corridors and along the walls.

At the entrance to the court house, boys laden with cushions, posted themselves and peddled their wares to prospective spectators. They found few buyers, however. Scores of persons, unable to find seats, returned to the courthouse lawn and grouped themselves about amplifiers.

COURT ROOM, Dayton, Tenn., July 13.—Declaring the state legislature has the right to prescribe the curricula of the public schools, Attorney-General A. T. Stewart concluded his argument against a motion by the defense to quash an indictment against John Thomas Scopes for alleged violation of the Tennessee anti-evolution teaching statute this afternoon. A brief adjournment followed the conclusion of the attorney-general argument after which Clarence Darrow began the concluding argument for the defense.

SALEM MAN ELECTED

(Associated Press Special Wire.) PORTLAND, July 13.—E. M. Page of Salem, was elected president of the Oregon State Elks Association and Eugene for the 1926 convention city was passed at the hall.

PORTLAND, July 13.—Politics blossomed this morning when delegates gathered at the Elks Temple for the one-day meeting of the Oregon State Elks Association and the name of E. M. Page of Salem for president and Eugene for the 1926 convention city was passed at the hall.

No particular opposition to the selection of Page and Eugene had developed at noon. Milton R. Klepper, exalted ruler of Portland lodge, was being booed for first vice-president.

The session was opened by an invocation delivered by John D. Sart of Jamestown, N. Y., chaplain of the grand lodge. John G. Price, exalted ruler of the grand lodge, delivered the opening address and an address of welcome was delivered by Klepper.

"The work of the Elks of New Jersey with crippled children could be made the work of the Oregon Association," said J. H. Buch, a member of the grand lodge committee on state associations and of New Jersey state association, crippled kiddies committee.

The Elks of New Jersey," said Buch, "are making crippled children into whole and healthy men and women. Here you have your Shrine hospital for crippled children, but there is still plenty of work among them to keep the Oregon Elks busy all the year."

President Ben S. Fisher of Marchfeld reviewed past year's activities. He said it was the first year in which the state association had attempted to do any constructive work, the meetings before last year's being merely for fun. He told of the activities of the various 21 lodges in flag day celebrations, constitution week observations, endorsements of Boy Scout or Junior Elks organizations, Americanization work participation by the state lodges in the national convention and work among boys paroled from the state reformatory.

The resolutions committee appointed by Fisher consists of E. M. Page of Salem, J. J. Bookman of Portland and J. J. Jennings of Eugene. The credentials committee consists of Gordon Baker of McMinnville, Fritz Deltz of Tillamook, and George W. Dunn of Ashland. Frank Cohan is secretary of the state association.

as this at Toledo.

"On May 12 business men of Toledo passed resolutions protesting against the employment of Japanese laborers in the spruce mill there. Subsequently Mr. C. D. Johnson of the plant, appealed to the state chamber, but the directors decided that they could take action in a purely local issue. However, I went down there and made a survey of labor conditions, and later made a survey in other sections, the results of which I put in a report issued June 19. The reports say that no unfavorable conditions were created in any of the mills or communities by the employment of Orientals in limited numbers; the only reason for the employment being that on certain kinds of work white labor would not remain on the job. The wages paid for this class of work are the same as those paid white men for similar work.

"Following the submission of this report, the Toledo Chamber of Commerce, on June 26, passed resolutions regarding the former protest against the employment of Japanese at the spruce plants."

national and was within the right of the state legislature. If the state legislature is not to control the public schools who shall it be questioned.

COURT ROOM, Dayton, Tenn., July 13.—The custom of opening Rhea county courts with a prayer may become an issue in the Scopes case here. Clarence Darrow, of counsel for the defense, while he has made no formal statement in the courtroom, is known to have protested informally to Judge John T. Raulston.

Shop at Home first. Years ago people went into the market place "to shop." They went, not knowing what they would find, its price or its worth. Weary hours were spent in inspection, in bargaining and buying. Today manufacturers are bringing the market place to your home. Every time a newspaper comes, a host of people are ringing your door-bell. Merchants and manufacturers are waiting on the doorstep to spread their goods at your feet for you to look at—to inspect at leisure and in comfort. Don't let the opportunity that advertisements offer you slip by. No matter what you want, clothing, groceries, a fountain pen or a farm, you will find the "better" ones in the advertising columns. The advertisements tell you where you can get what you want. They are a guarantee of worth that protects your purchase. Buying with a definite knowledge is so much better than shopping at random. Study the advertisements.

DELEGATES BACK FROM CONVENTION HELD AT PORTLAND

The delegates from the local churches have just returned from the Thirtieth International Christian Endeavor Convention, which was held at Portland, Oregon, from July 4 to July 10. The convention was attended by thousands and thousands of Christian Endeavorers from all parts of the United States and Canada. There were several representatives from foreign lands.

The theme of the convention was "Fidelity to Christian Endeavor Principles." Emphasis was placed upon the evangelistic, community and missionary activities of churches and the part played in these programs by the Christian Endeavor Society. According to the reports made at the convention, the Christian Endeavor movement is growing in towns and cities of North America and in foreign lands. The report made by General Secretary Edward P. Gates showed that 9,732 new Christian Endeavor societies have been organized during the last two years. The membership throughout the world is approximately 4,000,000 in 50,000 societies.

The program for the next two years which has been outlined will include increased denominational loyalty and more inter-denominational co-operation. A definite program to attain standards decided upon at the convention has been given for each month for the next two years. In September, for instance, the goal of the international leaders is to enroll 500,000 young people for Bible reading and scripture memorizing. It was said at the convention that there never was a greater need than today for a more sincere study of God's Word and.

The event of greatest interest at the convention was the retirement from active service of Dr. Francis E. Clark, who forty-four years ago established the Christian Endeavor Society at Portland, Maine. Dr. Daniel A. Poffin, pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York, who was born in Portland, Oregon, about forty years ago, was elected president of the United Society. Dr. Clark was elected president emeritus. In honor of his long service on a non-salaried basis, the trustees have arranged to establish what is called the Dr. Francis E. Clark Recognition Fund of $100,000, whose income will be devoted to the support of Dr. and Mrs. Clark so long as both shall live. After they have been called to higher service the fund will be known as the Francis E. Clark Memorial Fund, the income of which will then be devoted to the expansion of Christian Endeavor work throughout the whole world.

Local Christian Endeavorers are confident that the attendance of the delegates from local societies will greatly help in the formation of new societies in this community and the recruiting of many young people not now associated with the Christian Endeavor movement.
