DEATH PENALTY TO BE REVIVED AFTER LONG LAPSE

HAVANA, July 25. — Capital punishment, unknown in Cuba since 1906, is to have a rival. President Machado, recently stated that all future death sentences will be executed. Two cases, both from Pinar del Rio, have been confirmed by the criminal section of the Supreme Court, sentencing Valentine Martinez and Nazario Hernandez to death.

"I have not yet received the sentence which condemns to death Martinez," said Secretary of Justice Barraque, "but if there exists no reason to the contrary, it is certain that the president and his secretary of justice will inflexibly comply with the law."

"And the sentence of death of our courts, to whose majesty we all have profound respect, will be complied with quickly and without procrastination, in the form which our legislation places in force."

Secretary of the Presidency Vorato Gutierrez in an emphatic statement, said the President intended to sanction the sentence as soon as it reached him, and does not intend to commute any death sentences imposed by the courts, but will see that they are carried out.

Closely following the statement of Secretary Gutierrez was the action of the Supreme Court in confirming a second death sentence with the Audiencia Court of Pinar del Rio had imposed on Nazario Hernandez of Pinar del Rio.

Valentine Martinez was tried and convicted for the murder of his wife, Paula Ledesma, on the night of March 29, 1923, in Candelaria, Pinar del Rio province. Nazario Hernandez was given the supreme penalty for the killing of his illegitimate daughter in Pinar del Rio, during November, 1923. The child's mother was Rosalina Lopez, sister of his wife.

The last man to die by the garrote, Cuba's death chair, was Juan Chapin de La Liza, near Havana, convicted and sentenced for the murder of his nephew, Capin, the twentieth in Cuba, by the death penalty, was executed on June 12, 1906, by Patricio Lopez, called "El Gallego Colorado," (the red Galician), the official executioner. Since that time an executioner has held office, he being always a long term convict, whose sentence is shortened for each execution. The present executioner, Antonio la Paula Romero, was appointed June 12, 1922.

The garrote is a relic of the Spanish regime, and furnishes almost painless death to the victim. The criminal is seated in a chair, with his back against a post, and a brass collar, the garrote, is placed about his neck. In this collar is inserted a screw, at the point where it touches the back of the neck. The executioner turns the screw, and the spinal column of the condemned man snaps in two, producing death. A quarter to a half turn is sufficient.

About six years ago a bill prohibiting the garrote, substituting life imprisonment for capital punishment, passed the Senate. No action was taken in the House of Representatives, however, until recently, when the bill was dug out of a mass of tabled legislation, and attempts were made to place it on the calendar. The House, at the close of the last session of Congress on June 30, had taken no further action.

Doctor Advised Operation
Friend Said Try Lydia E.
Pinkham's Vegetable
Compound First

St. Paul, Minn. — "I was all run-down from overwork and worry, had no appetite, could not sleep at night, and looked like a corpse. I have six children (five boys and one girl) and did not get any strength after my last baby was born. I was getting sicker and sicker every day. The doctor said I had to go to the hospital, but this I could not do on account of my family. So I went to a friend of mine and told her what the doctor had told me and she said, 'Now do as I tell you. Try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as I have done. It helped me.' So I started taking the Vegetable Compound and I noticed after the first few bottles that I felt considerably better. After taking 9 or 10 bottles I got over my fainting spells. Everybody who sees me now notices the great improvement in my health. I am gaining in weight and strength and am feeling fine. Eat well and sleep good nights." — Mrs. MARY WILHELMY, 309 Duke Street, St. Paul, Minnesota.

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today
By Idah McGlone Gibson

Cleo Madison, entertaining friends, reads from her grandmother's diary. The flapper friends are thunderstruck by its quaintness and suppressed desires. Soon after Cleo scopes with her long-hood sweetheart, Lieutenant Paul Armstrong, U. S. A. Cleo's parents wished her to marry the rich and willing Connie Terhune. Cleo begins to learn that marriage is not a path of roses almost at once. The young couple departs for the army post. On the train Cleo has an allegorical dream indicating the problems she will have to face. On arriving, undomestic Cleo is able to serve tea to the "lady killer" colonel, through the help of Johnson, a striker. Col. Beldon has become involved in compromising circumstances with Rita Thornadyke. Rita is innocent; her husband is a crook. Rita secretly leaves the post to join a vaudeville troupe, a job which Cleo gets for her. Cleo's domestic life proceeds rocky onward, largely due to Paul's passion for gambling and lack of understanding.

A STARTLING SIGHT.
If any one could catch and imprison happiness in bottles, I thought as I looked at my saddened face, she could advertise the most wonderful beautifier in all the world. But as I looked I determined that my unhappiness should not ruin my looks if I could help it.

I decided to go at once to a beauty shop and have a facial and a shampoo and a manicure, everything that could improve my attractiveness. My hair looked so dull and straggly and my face was grey. Even my lips were pale. "Thank God for lipsticks," I said to myself, as I went to the telephone. It was rather late but by telephoning to a shop in town that Rhedda had recommended, I found that they could take me.

I started for town about 4 o'clock and at 7 that night, after being worked over for two hours and a half, I left the shop. I didn't want to go home for I knew I would be alone, and I was very hungry so I decided to get something to eat before returning, and slipped into the door of the restaurant connected with the leading hotel. As I did so I could have sworn I saw my roadster go round the corner just beyond.

"Great Scotland and the British Isles," I said to myself, "in a minute Cleo you will be going insane. You have wanted your car so much and now that you know it is coming, you think every rascal roadster you see is yours."

Much to my surprise, when I entered the dining room, I found Col. Beldon at a table all by himself. He looked very old and unhappy, but his eyes lighted up eagerly when he saw me and after I was seated he came over to my table and asked if he might dine with me.

"I had nothing to offer as an excuse, especially as he added, 'You certainly owe me some satisfaction, young woman, for you have virtually thrown me on my own society and I want to tell you that I am not very partial to it.'"

"What do you mean by that, Colonel?" Since I have been here it has seemed to me that you are so popular that you would have little trouble seeking others when you tired of your own and you will wonder me if I say that you never struck me as a man who disliked your own society."

"I never have before," he said earnestly. "Cleo do you know what you have done for me?"

It was a strange question. I thought it best not to answer it so I just kept quiet. He didn't seem to notice this but went on saying, "You've given me a great case of introspection and I'm sure you with a man is not always pleasant especially if it is accompanied by an unexpected visit from Conscience."

"Sorry Colonel, you have had such an annoying time, but I really cannot see why I should be blamed for bringing your conscience back to you or infecting you with a case of introspection."

"Why girl don't you know what creatures of habit we men are?"

"I expect I haven't been married long enough, Colonel. Up to date Paul has only shown me that he has a habit of gambling in every possible shape and way."

"There, there you are. That's his habit, Cleo."

"But he put it aside for me, Colonel, before we were married. I never knew that he played cards for money until we came to the Post."

"You must remember, my dear, that he was away from you for long months at a time. I'm a bit sorry for you, Cleo, for you have just learned, however, intimate a man and woman think they are before marriage, they never can conceive this day by day contact, this knowledge that each must almost know the other's thoughts. I have always been afraid of it and that's why I have never married."

He smiled a little inscrutable smile that wasn't very pleasant and softly quoted under his breath:

"I've taken my fun where I've found it."

And roused a bit in my time—"Is that the reason," I interrupted, "that Conscience is making her long deferred visit?"

"No, I don't think so. If that were the reason she should have come to me long before this. Lately I have been quite proud of myself. I don't think I ever was interested before in a man good before I met Rita Thornadyke."

"Yes, she's a good woman," I said. "I have had an illustration of it this morning."

"Then you've heard from her?"

"Yes."

"And she said nothing about me?"

"Not a word."

"And you won't give me her address?"

"Not until she tells me to."

Tomorrow: A Chance Dinner.

U. S. DOMINATES
THEATRE IN EUROPE
SAYS A CRITIC.

BERLIN, July 25. — America is setting its imprint upon the French theatre quite as much as upon that of Germany or of Austria, in the opinion of Hellmuth Barnick, critic, writing in the Lokal-Anzeiger.

"America is the bacillus," he observes, "which is infecting Europe. One notices this in Paris quite as much as in Berlin or Vienna. What Italian would have thought of producing 'Aida' in the open air outside of Vienna for an audience numbering tens of thousands, were it not for the fact that New York transformed a church into a theatre, and made a theatre into a church? America with its super-European dimensions simply kills the theater halls that have been kept up since the days of baroque. At Hollywood America builds up the whole inner city of Paris in order to film the photoplay 'Notre Dame.' America cracks the whip in the Casino de Paris and in the Olympia, and all Paris applauds."
