MUMPS

I'm mostly cheerful, as a rule. Specially if I miss some school. To lay around, so lazy like, To read a book, or fish, or hike. But now, by gosh, I'm in the dumps. You bet my jaws are mighty sore. I've got to miss two weeks or more. Because I've got the mumps. The folks they treat me awful good. Don't even make me get the wood. I lay around an read an read. Feel like I've got to read. Folks come along an feels the bumps. Behind my ears, an 'spreads their fears 'bout them "a-keetcher" mumps. I sit around the lonesome day. An' watch the hours slip away. But I hate the 'evrin' waist of all. When the gang goes by to practice ball. You see, I can't help from feelin' grumpy.

THE VOGUE OF THE FELT HAT

The Small Hat Reigns Supreme Pour le Sport, but for Formal Occasions the Large Hat Finds Favor

With "summer" sports occupying the greater part of the day, the felt hat which is small still dominates the field.

Comfortable, though not as cool as the bangkok or tallhatted felt hat imparted the air of chic which is so desired when dressing for one's sport.

For golf, the felt which boasts a narrow brim in front, with a trim ribbon bow, or cocky feather for its sole decoration, or an oddly dented crown, or winted effect at the brim, the small hat of felt assures a smart appearance on the putting green.

For motoring, the close fitting felt which assures comfort is to be desired above all others. Colors of pastel and deep tones may be found in these hats, so that any ensemble is made complete by its addition.

With a minimum of trimming, and a maximum of chic, the felt hat which is small, but very smart in lines, possesses the desirable qualities to be found in the hat for traveling.

At the seaside, where a hat is needed to complete a smart appearance, the felt hat in all shades is very chic. And just now when the painted felt hat may be found in the smart shops, the one perfect hat for many costumes may be found.

Painted, usually on a white felt, the delicate tones in pastels predominate, but here and there a dash of color is introduced to give the necessary dash to the tout ensemble.

Butterflies, blossoms and birds are combined with trailing vines to perfect a felt hat of great charm and color and one which goes equally well with the afternoon frock as with the sports costume.

While these felts in pastel tints are frequently wisely chosen to crown the afternoon ensemble, the hat which is large is generally noted in the really smart appearance.

The broad, flaring rim, which is so becoming, is fading favor once more in the fashionable world. These hats may be found in fine straws, and are also very smart in impalpable, chiffon, being transparent, imparts a summertime coolness.

The brim, while generally flaring, is frequently bent at one side with smart results, and in general it is noted that at the back the brim is very narrow and fits the head close by, or is smartly upturned.

The medium large and really large hat rivals the cloth in the mode for summertime smartness. Transparent hats lead the vogue, with crin being particularly cool and effective. Chiffons in hem-stitched effects are smart, while straws which are well ventilated are much worn.

The new shades which dominate in the field of frocks are also being used in these formal chapeaux. Violets and blues, with fuschia and periwinkles dividing favor, all are smart in the transparent straws and fabrics.

Fascinating large flowers, becomingly placed, are much used, while tiny floral clusters effectively used are smart trimming. Satin and velvet ribbons also lend chic.

Dorothy Mackall, who is a winning young person in the popular First National film, "Chick's," wears hats for all occasions in this picture. Some are small and severe in silhouette, while others are large and feminine in outline and carry a charming appearance for formal occasions.
