SPRAY FOR BROWN ROT ON PRUNES IS RECOMMENDED

Brown rot is a fungus disease which will be responsible for a heavy loss of ripening prunes if no effort is made towards control. The disease can be found each year in most valley orchards. The damage to the fruit will depend somewhat upon favorable weather conditions for germination of the fruiting spores.

Late spring rains or early fall rains are favorable for a heavy attack. Favorable weather prevailed last spring and early summer for a maximum growth of the disease in our orchards. This condition leads to the belief that growers who have a crop should take steps immediately to apply a protective spray. Bordeaux mixture made upon the following formula will be an important factor in control. Blue stone or copper sulphate 3 pounds, rock lime 4 pounds, water 50 gallons, plus 1 pound commercial bordeaux. Several commercial bordeaux mixtures can now be bought upon the open market and give good results when used in harmony with the manufacturer's recommendations. The home made formula is standard in every way if properly made and correct dilutions made for the final spray.

The majority of growers are well informed in bordeaux manufacture and use, but new growers should call or write the County Agent for Station Bulletin No. 201, Preparation of Spray Materials.

Every prune grower in the county should have a copy of Station Circular No. 53. This bulletin gives the life history and methods of control of Brown Rot and related diseases of stone fruits in Oregon. It is impossible to fight any disease intelligently unless those directing the fight have a thorough knowledge of the life cycle of the disease.

The spray recommended in this article is by far the most important spray that can be applied during the year for control of this serious stone fruit disease. Every effort should be made by the operator to get a film of spray material over every fruit.

What My Neighbor Says
Is of Interest to Roseburg Folks.

When one has had the misfortune to suffer from backache, headaches, dizziness, urinary disorders and other kidney ills—and has found relief from all this sickness and suffering, that person's advice is of untold value to friends and neighbors. The following case is only one of many thousands, but it is that of a Roseburg resident, who could ask for a better example?

A. J. Carman, R. R. conductor, 446 S. Pine St., says: "Continual riding on the train, affected my kidneys and caused dull pains in my back. Doan's Pills gave me the best of results."

SEVEN YEARS LATER Mr. Carman said: "If I ever have any trouble with my kidneys Doan's are sure to relieve me."

TREND PRISON REFORM IN U. S. IS OUTLINED

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The trend in American prison reform is toward individual attention for wrongdoers in courts and prisons. Dr. Amos W. Butler of Indianapolis, Ind., declares in a paper prepared for the International Prison Congress, in session here August 3-10.

After the custom of European associations, the paper, translated into French and reprinted, is handed to a committee which will summarize it and submit it to the whole congress as a basis for discussion. Mr. Butler is former secretary of the Indiana board of state charities.

The same movement toward individual care and instruction which has been accepted by hospitals and schools is now manifest in the treatment of prisoners. Mr. Butler showed, and courts and prison officials are considering wrongdoers individually and prescribing thus for disposition of their cases instead of treating them by formula or in the mass. The movement, however, is a gradual one, and its general acceptance as a policy will not immediately entail its universal practice.

Tracing the progress from congregation to individualization in prison work, Butler outlined the handling of prisoners from the time when William Penn replaced harsh treatment in the Pennsylvania colony with more humane methods, substituting prison for the gallows, labor for the bloody punishments and workhouses for the debauchery and idleness of the jail yard.

The high points in American progress in dealing with criminals, he found, were established in Virginia and Kentucky in the late eighteenth century, of the penitentiary system, with reduction of the crimes known as capital offenses and enactment by the Indiana legislature in 1860 of a "good time" law, enabling prisoners to shorten their sentences by good behavior and evidence of a desire to reform. He noted the founding in New York in 1876 of a reformatory, marking the beginning of the present reformatory system; establishment by Indiana in 1873 of the first separate prison for women; adoption by Massachusetts of the probation system in 1878; and finally physical and mental examinations for prisoners, with hospitals for the criminal insane and clinics for the treatment of criminals with less marked mental incapacity.

Summarizing the progress in criminal treatment, Mr. Butler found the forward steps in America falling into eight divisions. Employment of more humane methods was followed by gradual grouping of prisoners in special institutions for juveniles, women, young men who were first offenders, the criminal insane, and defective delinquents. Indeterminate or indefinite sentences were the next forward step, followed by the establishment of juvenile courts and the inauguration of the probation system, first for juveniles and then for adults. Physical and mental examinations, first in juvenile courts, then in reformatories and prisons, and finally in courts for adults that brought the treatment of the criminal to a higher plane, and finally routine mental examinations for prisoners, inaugurated in Massachusetts, and a movement for uniform criminal records in courts, have made the modern methods of dealing with wrongdoers the most effective in history.

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today
By Idah McGlone Gibson

The Story So Far.
Cleo Madison, after eloping with her boyhood sweetheart, Lieutenant Paul Armstrong, goes to his army post and she finds out almost immediately that married life is not too rosy. There is much intrigue at the post. Rita Thorndike, wife of a good lieutenant, flees from the post after much gossip about her and Col. Blakely Beldon. Cleo helps Rita and resolves not to let her own name become the subject of gossip. Paul exhibits a passion for gambling; loses $500 to the Colonel one night, pays, and loses $500 to a pair of cheap gamblers the next night. He is broke and gives the gamblers his wife's car in settlement of the debt. Cleo is furious; the Colonel wants to help and Paul is somewhat sullen.

Cleo will not accept the car which the Colonel has bought back for Paul. She makes her protest for not accepting all to clear.

PAUL COMES, SEES, BUT—
I heard the noise of an approaching automobile and forced myself to look out of the window. It was Paul driving up. Colonel Beldon heard the same sound and started up. "I must be going," he announced. "I should have gone before this but I've been learning so many things from a 'hit of a girl that I had forgotten all about time."

I took a sudden resolve. "Please stay Colonel Beldon. I want you to let me buy my car back and I want Paul to see me give you the check."

The Colonel, who had risen, sat down heavily. He seemed to be saying to himself, what is she going to do next? There was a silence in the room until Paul and the tea came in together. He greeted the Colonel in a somewhat constrained fashion, but kissed me with much ostentation.

"Well, Cleo, you will at last be happy," he said, with fictitious cheerfulness. "I have brought you the car and I'm going to make you a present of it. Henceforth I will not even ride in it unless you ask me."

"I hardly see, Paul, how you can make me a present of what is already mine. I understand, however, that through no fault of mine Colonel Beldon has a claim on it of five hundred dollars. While I do not acknowledge the right of either of you to enter into a loan on my car without consulting me I want you both to know that here and now I am giving Colonel Beldon my check for the amount of the car's price and I shall take precious good care that you shall not ride in it unless you are invited."

Both men taken by surprise stood looking like uneasy captives while I went on to my desk and made out the check.

As I held it but the Colonel said: "Lieutenant, please persuade her that I can not take that money."

"Don't be a fool, Cleo," said my husband brusquely. "Colonel Beldon understands the whole thing. He knows that I made a mistake in thinking that I could hold my end up to the bayonet. As soon as he found out that I had only my salary to depend upon, he just returned my money, that's all."

"I'm glad you look at it this way, but I have always thought that among men, a gambling debt was the most sacred of any in the world."

Colonel Beldon, looking very uncomfortable, hastily drank the tea which I had poured for him and set down his cup upon the nearby table.

"I'm sorry that I can't ride with you this afternoon, but the Colonel of a regiment has some duties, you know besides personally looking after two young people who have become dear to him."

I followed him to the door and he said in a lowered voice: "I think I shall have this check framed. It is the first one I have ever received from a woman. And such a clever woman."

There was an inscrutable smile upon his lips as he went out. I wondered what it meant. It bothered me. I felt like a fighter with his back against the wall. The two men seemed determined to bring me to their way of thinking.

When I returned to the room Paul was pacing up and down. "I don't think I have ever seen him more angry. In the first place I had humiliated him before the Colonel of his regiment and I had shown him that I had five hundred dollars that he knew nothing about."

"Thought you were clever didn't you?" Giving Colonel Beldon a hard check counting on the fact that he came back he wouldn't prosecute you! You ought to know that I would rather take his money than have you take it. You acted so high and mighty this morning about my taking it—"

"Why what do you mean Paul? That was an absolutely bona fide transaction."

"I thought you told me you had no money yesterday. Why did you lie to me, Cleo?"

"I didn't lie to you. I didn't have any money yesterday. I didn't have five hundred dollars in the bank yesterday."

For a moment Paul seemed petrified for he believed me, and then he pulled himself up to his full height and looked down at me scornfully. "You're a nice person to take me to task for borrowing a little money of the Colonel of my regiment, when all the while your bank-book showed a fat deposit from an old lover."

Beef cattle are in stronger position than a year ago and with production for a scarcity of fed steers the fact, higher favorable weather, according to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, United States Department of Agriculture, in its beef cattle outlook report released today. A large sum of corn at reasonable prices and a material reduction in the supply of hogs are also in prospect. This should result in an active demand for feeder cattle.

While there has been some liquidation and consequent reduction in numbers of cattle in some areas, it is not believed that the total market supply of grass cattle this fall will be materially less than the number marketed in 1924. Heavy marketing from important western cattle production regions during the past three years has been offset somewhat by favorable weather and feed conditions. Calf crops have been large and fasses small.

A short corn crop and high corn prices brought about in 1924 a material reduction in the stocker and feeder movement into the Corn Belt feedlots during the past 12 months. Finishers generally have followed a policy of marketing fed stock early with the result that market receipts during the remainder of the year are expected to be decidedly less than usual and prices should continue upward, especially for the better grades.

A relatively small supply of the better grades of heavy steers is now coming to market and they are selling on a parity with light weights which by commanding a premium through the latter half of 1924 and the first part of 1925.

As there is a limited demand for heavy weights they are not likely to command a premium for any great period of time.

The July 1 report of the department forecasted an increase in the corn crop in the Corn Belt states of 35 per cent over last year. The June pig survey showed that the number of hogs on farms is the lowest in several years. If the large corn crop materializes there will doubtless be an active demand for feeder cattle to fill the gap. Higher prices for fed steers will also tend to stimulate demand for feeder cattle as well as for low grade cattle for slaughter.

No material change in the domestic demand for beef is expected during the remainder of the year, but the smaller supply of hogs as compared with the past year should be a sustaining factor for beef. The European demand for meats increased during the past year, but so far as beef is concerned most of the European trade is supplied from Argentina, and it seems likely that this will continue. As long as European markets absorb the Argentine surplus it is unlikely that there will be any considerable movement of beef from that country to the United States.

DIRECTOR LEAVES JOB ON LEPER ISLE AFTER 25 YEARS

HONOLULU, Aug. 5.—Almost a quarter of a century in the service of the inmates of Kalaupapa, the "saddest spot on earth," on the lonely leper isle of Molokai, was completed recently when John D. McVeigh retired as superintendent of the settlement and assumed a supervisory and advisory position for the leprosy receiving station at Kailahi, Honolulu.

McVeigh was succeeded as superintendent by Ralph L. Cooke, former superintendent of the wireless department of the Mutual Telephone company. Dr. W. J. Goodhue, who has served as physician at the settlement since 1902, also retired and was succeeded by Dr. Harold Marshall, who has been at the settlement in Louisiana.

Reviewing his service on the small triangular island between raging ocean breakers and the virtually impassable windward cliffs of Molokai which houses the settlement, McVeigh said that the three greatest changes were the building of a poi factory, the introduction of motion pictures to the colony, and the discovery of the Dean Chalmougra oil specific for the treatment of the inmates. These provided palatable food, distraction for the mind, and relief and perhaps cure for the body, he said.

The Chalmougra oil specific for leprosy is obtained in the earliest stages of the scourge and Kalaupapa receives only relatively advanced advanced cases. So highly does McVeigh regard the treatment that he predicted the close of the Molokai settlement within 20 years if diseased persons would surrender themselves and receive injections in time. Education and the enlisting of public support for the territory's fight against leprosy are aims to which he intends to devote himself.

"Almost every passenger steamer arriving here from the mainland has some contribution to the tuberculosis sanitarium," he commented. "But little is done for the lepers. There is too much of the attitude, 'Oh, he's a leper; send him to Molokai to die.'"

As the first man who gave his undivided attention to the settlement, McVeigh was called upon to do a great deal of pioneering work, interested the inmates in baseball, horse racing and other sports that would help them to forget their condition and brought them to realize that they were not outcasts but "victims of a certain disease."

Describing the patients, McVeigh said: "They are first rate. They come into my yard to work, but they would never think of entering my house. They are law-abiding and it is remarkable what little disciplining they need if they are all treated alike."

When the United States entered the war I called the lepers together and told them that things might be a little hard and food short. "That's all right," said their spokesman. "So long as the country is in trouble we'll not complain." They invested all they could in war savings stamps, some buying more than they could afford, but they never tried to sell the stamps until the war was over. During a Red Cross campaign the settlement raised $999.70, and the lepers wanted to make clothes for the boys in France. I explained to them as carefully as I could that we could send nothing because it would not be accepted, but that did not stop them and they subscribed money to have clean persons do the work."
