HEALTH BULLETIN

What About Mothers?

It has been said that to become a mother is more dangerous than to be a soldier in a front-line trench. While this is something of an exaggeration (particularly in state like Oregon, where the people live under good conditions) it does remind us that motherhood is a much more dangerous undertaking than it has any right to be. In 1924, in Oregon 108 mothers lost their lives in giving birth to children. It is certain that a large proportion of these deaths was unnecessary, and would not have occurred if the proper precautions had been taken.

During the same year, 828 infants died. Many of them could have been saved if their mothers had had a better understanding of their care, especially during sickness. Education of mothers and mothers-to-be would save many lives—both their own and their children's. For this reason, the bureau of child hygiene of the Oregon State Board of Health has prepared a series of letters to prospective mothers, which are sent monthly before the baby comes, and for four months thereafter.

These letters, take up, in a simple way, the things a mother should know and should do to prepare for her baby's coming. They advise her of the precautions she should take at various times, and what danger signals to look for. They tell her how to go about conserving her health, and that of her unborn child. The second series of letters gives her pointers on taking care of the new baby, in the same way.

Many expressions of appreciation have been received from women who received these letters and from their doctors. It does not seem to be generally known, however, that the letters are available. Physicians who have patients whom they would like the series sent to, should send the patient's name to the Bureau of Child Hygiene, State Board of Health, Portland. Prospective mothers who would like the letters should send a request to the same office.

A selection of the best pamphlets and literature available on various subjects connected with the letters is sent out with the latter. There is no cost whatever connected with this service.

Enrollment day at the Reedsport public schools will be Monday, September 7, Labor Day, says the Port Umpqua Courier. On that day the pupils will register for their respective grades. After the registration, a two-day holiday is to be declared in order that the children may attend the Smith River Fair on Monday and Tuesday.

School children this year will have a new gymnasium in which to receive physical training. Work on the building for which Lillebo and Ash have the contract, is now well under way.

EXPECTS GOOD EXHIBIT FROM COUNTY AT FAIR

C. O. Garrett, of Glendale, who has charge of the collection and display of the Douglas County exhibit at the state fair, is spending a few days in this vicinity gathering specimens for use at the fair. Mr. Garrett has just returned from a trip east, visiting points in the south and middle west. He spent several weeks in his old home at St. Louis.

He expects to devote the greater part of his time, from now until fair time, to the Douglas County exhibit. The display, he expects, will be far greater and better than ever before as the crops this year are of fine quality.

He is particularly anxious to get specimens of grain, and asks all grain growers to preserve extra good samples. Threshed grains particularly are wanted, and any person who can help in this matter is asked to notify either Mr. Garrett, or County Agent Cooney.

INDIAN HAS AN OUTDOOR BATHTUB THAT IS NOVEL

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 7.—When a Glacier Park Indian catches cold he drinks hot herb tea and packs himself in his outdoor sweat bath, which is about as near to nature's contrivance as is possible, the Indian Department informs us. Willow boughs are bent so that each end is in the ground four feet apart forming a framework. A fire is built in the center of a pile of stones on the ground. Hides and blankets are put over this framework of boughs and when hot the fire is withdrawn and the patient steps in, with a pail of water. He keeps sprinkling the water on the hot stones, getting an ideal vapor sweat bath. "Heap heat" and his cold is gone.

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today

By Idah McGlone Gibson

PAUL RECEIVES HIS TELEGRAM

The Story So Far:—Cleo Madison elopes with Lieutenant Paul Armstrong, U. S. A. It does not take Cleo long to discover marriage is not a path of roses. On the train, going to the army post, she has an allegorical dream indicating her future problems. The colonel, Arthur Blakely Beldon, of the post, is a "lady killer" and his actions have compromised Rita Thorndike, wife of a reprobate lieutenant. Rita is innocent and Cleo forms an immediate and deep friendship for her. Rita, at Cleo's instigation, decides to leave the post and joins a vaudeville troupe under the name Rheda Thorwaldsen. Paul has been having his troubles, chiefly liquor and gambling. Cleo refuses to be gushingly sympathetic. The post is agog with gossip and suspicion when Rita leaves and the colonel implores Cleo to give him information—unsuccessfully. Climaxing a series of domestic troubles between Cleo and Paul, Cleo puts Paul in the hospital by hitting him on the head with a vase.

You know, dear diary, how unsatisfactory a telegram is which says a certain sum of money is waiting at the telegraph office. It never tells who it is from, nor how much it is. Unless you have sent for it, you just have to guess who loves you enough to part with money.

Of course this is to safeguard the recipitent of the money. The person to whom the message is addressed is supposed to tell the name of the sender and the amount sent, both of which are recorded in the telegraph office, and this serves for identification.

This was the kind of telegram that the boy gave me. This was the kind I was reading. It was addressed to Paul, and I knew it had to be submitted to him. I knew he would be furiously angry because I had opened a telegram addressed to him.

If the wire had been a letter, I would never have opened it. I think the person who would open a private letter would steal almost anything; but a wire is really something different, almost public property. Under the circumstances it seemed as though I had a perfect right to read it. Paul was at the hospital. He had probably just been settled down and was resting after his loss of blood. Not knowing what the telegram was about, I thought it was much better to find out whether it contained bad news before I let my husband see it.

After I read the wire I knew that it was from Chick or Connie. Paul had no other friends who were rich enough to send him money—and his father had given him every cent he possibly could when we were married a short time ago. It hurt my pride to think that my husband would borrow money from Connie, for I had that traditional prejudice against any man borrowing money from a woman. I presume it is an old one, inherited from my grandmother. Today a young man will not hesitate to borrow from the girl he has taken for a motor ride or a dinner, if he finds his money has run out.

It would not have been as bad if Paul had borrowed from Chick. I could stand that better than the knowledge that he was taking money from Connie.

I stood still and pondered on this problem for a long while. How was I going to get this message before Paul in his weakened state without getting him so angry that it would retard his recovery?

"Well, here goes!" I said. "I'll hike over to the hospital and take my medicine, but in the meantime I will give some to Paul that is even bitterer than mine." The orderly showed me my husband's room and left me. "I think Lieut. Armstrong is asleep," he said. I opened the door softly, but I found Paul awake. When he saw the yellow envelope in my hand, his pale face became crimson.

"What have you there, Cleo?" he asked.

"A wire addressed to you."

"Let me have it," he commanded, stretching out his hand which trembled.

Quickly he took it, and eagerly he scrutinized it. His face paled as he realized that the envelope had been opened.

"You have read it!" he exclaimed.

"Yes," I answered laconically.

"May I ask, Cleo, what business you have to open telegrams or letters addressed to me?"

"That's unfair, Paul. You know I would never open a letter belonging to you, but a telegram is different."

"You will pardon me, Cleo, if I say I can hardly see the difference. A telegram and a letter are both delivered in a sealed envelope, presumably so that no one but the one to whom it is addressed may read it. I am surprised that my wife, so punctilious about most things, should, because of her jealous curiosity, make the timeliness of a wire an excuse for prying into her husband's correspondence."

When Paul Armstrong puts on his high and mighty airs, I want to throw things at him; but as I had nearly killed him by a demonstration of that kind, a short time before, I thought it better to restrain myself.

I kept perfectly silent, but I looked my husband straight in the eye, and I flatter myself that my glance told him more than if I had said what was seething in my soul.

"Well," said Paul jauntily after a moment's silent duel between us, "let's see what's in Connie's mind that she cannot wait to send it by letter, but must telegraph."

CABINET MEN AND COOLIDGE CONFER ON COAL OUTLOOK

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., Aug. 7.—Attorney-General Sargent arrived today to confer with President Coolidge, and it was announced that Secretary Hoover would be here tomorrow for a brief stay at White Court.

The attorney-general, coming from Washington on a night train, stopped at the summer White House on his way to his home at Ludlow, Vt. He planned to remain here until tomorrow morning, his visit affording the president an opportunity to discuss with him the anthracite situation and other questions, in which the department of justice has an interest.

While it was reiterated today that the president had not summoned either the attorney-general or the commerce department head here to discuss the hard coal wage controversy and was not disturbed over the threatened suspension of anthracite operations September 1, it was admitted that Mr. Coolidge was seeking information and would take advantage of the presence of both officials to talk over the situation and the policy to be pursued with regard to it.

Secretary Hoover, it was said, is coming to Swampscott primarily to invite the president to San Francisco in September for a jubilee celebration.
