FOREST SERVICE ISSUES FIGURES ON FIRE COSTS

Eight hundred and fifty-four forest fires have been fought by the U. S. Forest Service in the National Forest regions of Oregon and Washington up to July 31 this year. Of these 693 were held under one quarter of an acre, 209 were held under ten acres, and 24 were larger fires of ten acres or over. Lightning was responsible for 600 of the fires, while 254 were man caused. These figures have just been issued by the District Forester, Portland, Oregon.

The report covers only fires handled by the forest service in or adjacent to the national forests. Of the man-caused fires, 194, or approximately 40 per cent, were due to campers. Smokers come next, charged with 69 fires, or about 27 per cent. Lumbering is third, having caused 24 fires. Lumbering fires, however, stand first in point of damage, reports are received over, according to the forest service information. Two of the worst fires in the national forests of this district this year are fires occurring in lumbering operations. The Wind River fire on the north side of the forest, which burned an area of approximately 4,500 acres, started on the Wind River sale area, a going operation. While the cause of this fire was not definitely established, it started on an area closed to the public, and owned by the forest service.

Another damaging fire on Snow Creek, Olympic national forest, with a burned area of about 200 acres, also started on a timber sale operation, due to defective equipment, according to reports. Other man-caused fires are railroads, 20 fires; brush-burning, 16 fires; incendiary, 2 fires, and miscellaneous, 19 fires.

The report shows that to date there have been 47 convictions for violations of the forest fire laws; and there are a number of other cases being prepared for prosecution.

These 854 fires burned a total of 12,739 acres. Of this area, 9,300 acres were national forest land; 510 acres were privately owned land in point of timber sale operations, and 2,929 acres privately owned land outside and adjacent to national forest boundaries.

Forest officers state that dry electric storms have been unusually bad this year, causing an increase in lightning fires. At the same time there appears to be an increased fire-consciousness on the part of the forest-camping public, with a correspondingly smaller number of man-caused fires, as compared to former seasons.

One casualty has been reported to the district office in connection with fires handled by the forest service this year. This was the death of Ray Dordil, a fire fighter, who was killed by a falling snag on a fire near the Rainier National forest in the vicinity of Morton, Wash.

SMOKERS FOUND GUILTY OF STARTING FIRES IN FORESTS

Smouldering cigarettes and burning pipe heels have both again been legally proved guilty of causing forest fires, reports the U. S. Forest Service.

Recently two fires were started on the Chelan National Forest in Washington. One was along the road between the hamlets of Carlton. It was caused by throwing lighted cigarettes from a car. The guilty party was apprehended with sufficient evidence for conviction in Justice Gelsler's court at Brewster. In addition to the fine and court costs imposed by state law, the party was assessed $14.00, the cost of extinguishing the fire.

The other fire was caused by a sheepherder on Buttermilk Creek, who went into a willow thicket to cut a pole. While running around in the thicket, he knocked his pipe from his mouth, spilling the burning tobacco. The fireman on Lookout Mountain reported a fire between the forks of Buttermilk. When the Forest Service trail crew arrived, one and one-fourth hours later, they found an 8-acre fire. The sheepherder admitted having been the cause of it. The judge did the rest.

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today
By Idah McGlone Gibson

"IS LOVE REAL, PAUL?"
"I do not think I mean Chick." I answered when Paul jealously asked me if I wanted to go to him.

"I do not think I mean Chick," I repeated, "when I say I wish I were back home, for to tell the truth, dear diary, I had not intended to say anything to my husband about our marriage being a mistake. The words had rushed to my lips without my volition. Now that I had said them, however, I knew in my sane, sane soul that I had known the truth of them ever since my husband and I had come to the army post."

"When I think of home, Paul," I said, trying to explain to myself, perhaps as much to him, the whole meaning of those words, "it is of my father and mother, the old house where I was born, the gams, the people on the streets, the sunshine, the flowers—all the loveliness of the city at this time of year."

"Oh, Paul, why didn't you wait? Why did destiny let us in for such calamities when we were perfectly innocent of wrongdoing, when our only sins were those of ignorance and perhaps a passionate curiosity?"

"Yes, it does seem strange," said Paul, more earnestly than he usually spoke, "that you and I, who have grown up together, who have made what we called love to each other, and did not know ourselves or each other."

"Then you, my dear," I asserted, "feel this quite as much as I. Is our marriage a mistake? You should have married a most thoroughly unselfish woman, and God knows that only an unselfish man could make me happy. We are both too self-centered."

"Don't you know honey there is no such thing as an unselfish man?" asked Paul, apparently hearing only the last part of my sentence.

"What are we going to do?" I asked helplessly, and I knew my voice held a note of despair.

Paul looked away. "Oh, I guess we'll just try to muddle along like most people do. Perhaps in the end we will settle down to some sort of a compromise which will bring a modicum of content."

"But I don't want content or compromise," I said rebelliously. "I want to be really happy, and so do you."

"Well, I don't know that either one of us would be happier with some one else, do you?" Again there was a jealous note in Paul's voice.

"Oh, I'm not thinking of people. I'm just thinking of happiness. Where has it gone, Paul—where has it gone? Do you remember those days of our honeymoon, when we were away together all alone?"

"I don't know why the mere thought of those days sends my blood coursing through my veins, and sets my heart beating at top speed, and—and I thought it was going to be like that always."

"That's just it, I believe people can love each other if, when they are together they think of nothing else but love. How is a jealous little gamin, that god they call Eros—he just turns and flies out of the window the moment one begins to think how one is treated, and that one's shoes are wearing out, or is called to account for some fancied extravagance by the other," remarked my husband.

"If you ask me, Paul, I think that the Love-god is a damn little gamin, that god they call Eros—he just turns and flies out of the window the moment one begins to think how one is treated, and that one's shoes are wearing out, or is called to account for some fancied extravagance by the other," remarked my husband.

"Then you don't love me any more, Cleo?" my husband asked tremulously.

"I don't know. I've almost come to the conclusion that I don't even know the thing you call love. But I will set your mind at rest about one thing, dear—I don't love any other man. I think I'm growing afraid of men, and I know I'm growing afraid of love. If you're what one calls 'in love,' you're so easily hurt. You magnify trifles into something stupendous and overwhelming, and your heart seches from the center."

"I'd rather not be in love at all. I'd rather never have known the ecstasy of those days when we were first married, than have had to contrast them with the utter sorrow I know now."

"And it's all so silly, Cleo, isn't it?"
"For a moment anger flamed up, then I answered:
"Yes, Paul, it is silly, but I've come to the conclusion that it is the little silly things of life that can torture us the most."

FORMER DOUGLAS COUNTY FRUIT INSPECTOR PREDICTS BIG ROGUE PEAR CROP

SALEM, Aug. 11.—Everybody in Medford is optimistic to a top degree, according to Earl Peary, who has just returned from a trip through that section. The pear crop is coming in in full blast, with the size up larger than ordinary. Plenty of water and a good growing season having produced a crop of exceptional quality.

Peary states that shippers are packing out 135s and larger and that half of the crop, approximately, will be sent out for green shipment while the other half goes to canneries.

The fact that Medford has a new cold storage plant of ample facilities, is taking the edge off from the collapse of the green market, which has been due to heavy deliveries of California stuff, which has been reaching the market in a soft state, and by storing Medford people are satisfied that they can hold their pears until the market comes back, and they feel certain they will get the best prices for a long time, with fine quality marking the shipments.

Denney & Co. have four packing plants working full blast on the pear deal at Medford and are setting all the fruit they can handle on consignment. Last year they netted their growers $80 when $55 was the highest cash price paid.

SPECTACULAR FIRE BURNS SHERIDAN ST. RESTAURANT

A skylight last night saved the city from what would otherwise have been a disastrous fire, when the Depot Lunch, a small restaurant on Sheridan street, was destroyed by fire. Had it not been for the skylight, in the back of the building, there is little doubt but that all of the buildings on the corner of Sheridan and Cass streets would have been wiped out.

The fire evidently started shortly after midnight from an overturned oil stove in the rear of the restaurant building. As the place has not been operated since the first of the month, it is thought that the fire was started either maliciously, or by prowlers, possibly endeavoring to slip into the rear entrance of one of the adjoining buildings.

The oil stove was directly under a skylight, and the fire, breaking out the glass, created a regular chimney, the flames bursting high into the air and forming a spectacular blaze. Had it not been for the skylight directly overhead, the flames would doubtless have destroyed the other restaurants, as three of them occupy the corner, their kitchens being in a group, so that the spread would have been rapid. As the buildings are of frame construction it would have taken only a few minutes for the entire block to be as fire.

The department upon reaching the scene of the fire judged from the amount of the flames and smoke that they were up against a hard proposition, and quickly laid two lines of hose, and were preparing to get their full equipment into action. The first dash of water, however, destroyed the spectacular aspect, and within a few minutes the fire was extinguished.

The restaurant was owned by H. C. Sullivan, who also owns and conducts the "Crescent Lunch" on Cass street. Since the first of the month the eating house has not been operated, and it is understood that there was some difficulty between Mr. Smith and the former proprietor, who was closed out ten days ago.

Wm. R. Miller, of Medford, Calif., a brother of Mrs. Smith, was arranging to open the restaurant again, and would have started business today.

The building is owned by James Hildebrand, who sustains the greatest loss, as considerable damage was done by fire and water.

TYPHOON STRIKES HOLLAND; 4 DEATHS, RUIN IN ITS WAKE

(Associated Press London Wire.)
AMSTERDAM, Holland, Aug. 11.—Four persons are reported to have been killed and about 100 injured in the small village of Borculo, in eastern Holland near the German border, when it was struck by a typhoon which lasted several minutes last night. The village is a mass of ruins. Both churches were demolished and not a single house escaped damage.

Other villages in the eastern part of Gelderland province, seriously damaged by last night's storm are Hildan, Doelincchen, Oldenzaan and Bengelo. Only few details are available as communication has been interrupted.

During the hurricane an airplane crashed on the Catholic asylum at Ruuric, killing three people.

The center of the storm was at Borculo, which has five thousand inhabitants. A thousand of them are homeless; the rest are living in the ruins of their homes.

The burgomaster of Borculo, discharging the duties of mayor, said he saw the Holland village of Liere during the war after seven German bombardments, and the situation at Borculo was much worse.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—An Amsterdam dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company reporting the typhoon at Borculo says that 200 persons were injured. Such a violent and disastrous storm, it is added, has never visited Holland before.

SOUTHAMPTON ATTRACTS THE OLD LINE

SOUTHAMPTON, Aug. 11.—Having abandoned this port nearly 50 years ago because of lack of accommodation, the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship company intends using it again for almost all its services. The authorities take this as a compliment to their efforts of late years to make Southampton the chief passenger port of the United Kingdom.
