The Brainless Critic
An empty head and a big mouth are the qualifications of the self appointed critic. When a man's ideas are sufficiently numerous to hold themselves together without rattling, the world has peace and preachers have sunshine, but every fool must be prating. If you are to believe some people, the whole world is wrong, and they are the only ones who are right. All clocks and even the sun itself must move in harmony with their watches or they are off. They can run a car better from the back seat than an expert driver from the front. These scorchers find fault with government, society, business and religion in turn. The country is going to the dogs because their party is out of power, and they are eternally waiting for the world to go to smash. They find fault with the rich for being rich and the poor folk for being poor, and with the world at large for not appreciating their personal worth. Business, they insist, is going to the 'dogs' and good times will come again no more. They go around whining about how things were when they were young, and like a millstone about the neck of their own business, their pessimism throttles every effort of others to keep things moving. In religion everybody is a hypocrite and a sham, and there is 'no one righteous' with the exception of themselves. They excel the angels in their power of looking into the mysteries of godliness. If the moon had ever been open to impressions made by critics of this type, the bayings that have ebbed their noise on it since the creation would have put out its light long before the flood.—Oregon Merchant.
What Uncle Sam Owes Us
That more than 50 per cent of the area of Oregon is the property of the national government is realized by but few people. This large acreage, which pays but a very small sum yearly to the support of the state or to the state's development, which is free from taxation and outside the control of its people, presents a big problem in state administration. It is a cause of high taxes in Oregon. The only revenue that comes from this big area is the 35 per cent of the sales of timber that is cut annually from the timber reserves. Citizens in all parts of the United States have common interest in these government lands with Oregonians, but they are not made to bear the brunt of ownership. In Oregon, besides the timber lands of the national forests 22 per cent of the area of the state is owned by the federal government, according to an article published in the Literary Digest, of Saturday, August 22. The same article tells us that more than one-half the land in eleven western states is owned by the federal government, the total acreage being 431,000,000 acres or approximately 675,000 square miles. This vast area is equal to an expanse 12 times the size of New Jersey, the government with the largest real estate holder within the limits of the United States should be a greater factor in building roads throughout the states where its holdings are the largest.
We are not criticizing the government in its policies. We are pleased to see in its viewpoint toward the problem which its vast ownership of land in the far west entails a tendency toward cooperation with and helpfulness towards various states. But we urge that the government ought to keep in mind constantly the handicap its holdings do place upon the states affected and should outline policies of cooperative administration which are marked for their generosity.—Albany Herald.
Free Salvation
The Rev. Mr. Bulgin, evangelist from Portland, has just sold his yacht in Miami, Florida, for $25,000. Billy Sunday is worth twice that much, and a lot more. Bryan preached every Sunday in Florida out doors and syndicated religious articles and died worth a quarter of a million. The congregation will rise while we sing number 843 "We're Glad Salvation's Free."—Corvallis Times.
Mrs. Chas. Oakley returned to her home near Dillard yesterday afternoon after spending a short time here visiting.
THEATRES
Antlers Theatre
"Eye's Secret," a new Paramount picture co-starring Betty Compson and Jack Holt, which will be the feature at the Antlers theatre tonight, is the story of a Duke, who falls in love with a pretty peasant girl and sends her in Paris to be educated and then has the time of his life keeping her for himself.
The chateau of Jack Holt, Duke of Poltava, overlooks the picturesque little French village of d'Enville. Following a banquet, the Duke discovers the Princess, the woman he loves and is to marry, in the arms of another man. A duel ensues. The Duke kills his adversary, adding another victory to his already long list, which has earned for him the title of "The Killer."
So it is that the Duke becomes disillusioned and loses all faith in the women of his own rank and turns elsewhere in his quest for happiness. But it is not until another duel passes by the boards with the Duke getting the worst of it for the first time in his life, that he finally finds it.
"Eye's Secret" has everything—action, thrills, drama, love-interest and comedy-relief. The story is based on the Broadway stage success, "The Moon-Flower," by Zoe Akins. Clarence Bowder directed, and Adelaide Heilbron wrote the screen play.
