EXPANSION OF EUROPEAN FRUIT MARKET EXPECTED

Present indications are that Europe may absorb as many American and Canadian apples this year as last, reports Edwin Smith, foreign market specialist of the Department of Agriculture, who just returned from abroad. While it is true that the English apple crop is better both as to quantity and quality than in 1924, yet it is scarcely more than half a full crop and the varieties that show the best promise are cooking varieties. The continental crop is very short and will scarcely be a factor in the deal. In every European country the pear crop is one of the smallest on record. No doubt pear prices will be sufficiently high to attract some of the harder American varieties.

Germany will start taking volumes of American apples earlier than last year and if the market is handled judiciously, Mr. Smith advises, will take steady consignments in greater total volume than in 1924. A heavy crop of apples in Nova Scotia will somewhat offset Virginia's shortage, while in the boxed apple deal British Columbia's reduced crop will ease up on the competition with our Pacific coast states.

An intimate association with the fruit markets of Europe over a period of nine months has given Mr. Smith a vivid impression of the relative greater importance of the commerce in fresh fruit and vegetables in the United States over this phase of commerce in the old world.

This, he says is not because the peoples of the old world like fruit less but is directly traceable to our placing perishables before our consumers in a fresher and more edible state during longer marketing seasons throughout the year.

Scientific methods of production, standardized grades and packages, conversation through handling and refrigeration and a degree of marketing efficiency that returns fruit and vegetable growers a margin of profit are the real reasons why American consumers have a greater assortment of fresh fruits and vegetables continually before them and why they are greater consumers of this type of food than are the people of Europe.

"If strawberries are on the English market in abundance for only one month whereas they are plentiful on the New York market for three months, it is not because the English people like strawberries less than New Yorkers, but because growing this fruit in southern France or Spain, and its refrigeration, standardized grades and packages adapted to a potential demand.

"It has been our willingness to standardize our producing and transportation methods and facilities to meet potential market demands that has made a place for our fruit in European markets and will continue to open up new markets to us even though possibilities for growing just as good fruit are lying dormant in many parts of Europe itself.

"After seeing our apples arriving in Europe during an entire marketing season, and having a full realization of all the inferior fruit that reaches the European consumer, it is a wonder to me that we market as much abroad as we do. By bettering the quality of our fruit to the foreign retailer and consumer, I am certain that we will experience an increased demand with an amplified popularity."

What American apple growers must work for in expanding their markets abroad, according to Mr. Smith, are: Constant and adequate supplies; less waste and lower costs to the consumer; and better quality upon arrival.

One of the topics of conversation among members of the fruit trade in Great Britain relates to the tremendous strides made during the past year by grapefruit in the British Isles. It jumped from one of the rare exotic fruits seen only in large centers to a regular article of trade, stocked by all progressive wholesalers and most retailers. Mr. Smith points out that where American producers get behind it with a continuous educational program, it seems certain that grapefruit might be absorbed in European markets in large quantities. At present only a very few people know what the fruit is or how it should be eaten.

"The economic situation remains unchanged. But little difference can be seen between the different countries when it comes to the buying power of the working people. Compared to Americans they all receive a meagerly wages. Unemployment

FATHER OF LINCOLN PRESIDENTIAL ROOM ILL IN 90TH YEAR

MADISON, N. J., Aug. 29.—William O. Stoddard, 90-year-old veteran of the newspaper profession and once private secretary to Abraham Lincoln, is seriously ill at his home.

Mr. Stoddard was the first journalist to put forward the name of Lincoln as presidential timber in 1853 and after the latter's election in 1860 was invited to join the president's official family as secretary, a post which he held for four years.

is possibly worse in England than in any other country. The subvention voted by the British parliament to reimburse the coal mine owners against loss at the present rate of pay to the miners has postponed the strike that was due to begin August 1. The general feeling is that this will bolster up the coal industry for the next several months, though a permanent solution has by no means been reached.

SEATTLE, Aug. 31.—(A. P.)—A house five feet nine inches wide at one end and 16 feet at the other was built on a lot 130 by 11 feet here this summer by A. B. Wark, contractor. An ordinance requiring the house to be in line with others on the two streets it faces was the reason the structure took the shape of a flatiron, Wark said.

The dwelling contains three furnished rooms. In the rooms a dining table and breakfast nook, a reclining bed and a vanishing ironing board were installed. The basement has a combination laundry and garage.

Wark said he was trying to find somebody the house would fit so that he could sell it.

PAUL'S MOTHER WADES IN I perhaps oughtn't to have told all this to my father, but it had been in my heart so long—I had kept it secret from everybody.

And now I sat there on that garbaged sofa behind the tree in the hospital grounds and poured out to my father all that I had gone through physically and mentally. "Dad," I said, "you must have known that Paul and I could not live on his pay. Some people could have done it, but not we. Why didn't you put me up and keep there until I came to my senses?"

"Forgive me, won't you, dear old Daddy, if I say that one of the reasons we cannot be happy is because you were too kind to me as a girl. You gave me everything my undisciplined mind desired, and most of the things were very bad for me. Why, you even gave me Paul!"

It wasn't kind of me, dear daddy, to say this to my father. I know it now, and I knew it then by the hurt tone of his voice when he said:

"Cleo, I know your mother and I have been greatly to blame, but we wanted you to be happy, my child; we have always wanted you to be happy. You know that, don't you?"

I felt my father's hand tremble as it was laid upon my cheek, and I was quite ashamed that I had hurt him. "Here come the Armstrongs, child," he said. "We'll talk about it later."

"If you're ready to go, Cleo, we will go over to your house," spoke Mrs. Armstrong in a very snippy tone of voice as they came out to us.

"I have been looking for you all over. I'm quite sure you didn't know you had hidden yourself away from everyone when you sat down on this seat—you could not possibly be as impolite as that to Paul's parents."

"I confess I do not understand the regulations of an army hospital," she continued petulantly. "After sending for Paul's parents, they will not let us see him. I seem very strange to me."

"Now, Sally," expostulated Paul's father, don't you understand when they send for us, the doctor thought the boy was in danger. Now he's getting better, so they tell me, and they do not want him disturbed for fear it will retard his recovery."

"Retard his recovery? I fall to see why the sight of a boy's parents will retard his recovery. Why, you and I have taken care of him through all sorts of sickness, and I am sure, as far as I am concerned, that I have done just as much for him as though I were his own mother. I think there's something strange about the whole thing. We arrive here to find to one to meet us. Evidently, Cleo here, did not even know we were coming. And then to cap the climax, they refused to let us see Paul."

"You say, Cleo, that we will probably see the colonel in command at dinner. You may be sure I will register a complaint."

"Where is Charles Adams? Someone told me he was here. Probably he is with Paul this minute. At least he has been allowed to see him, I'll wager. Who

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today
By Idaho McGlone Gibson

Cleo Madison eloped with Lieutenant Paul Armstrong, U. S. A. It does not take Cleo long to discover marriage is not a path of roses. On the train, going to the army post, she has an allegorical dream indicating her future problems. The colonel, Arthur Blakely Heldon, of the post, is a "lady killer" and his actions have compromised Rita Thordike, the wife of a reputable lieutenant. Rita is innocent and Cleo forms an immediate and deep friendship for her. Rita, at Cleo's instigation, decides to leave the post and join a vaudeville troupe under the name Rheda Thorwaldson. Paul has been having his troubles, chiefly liquor and gambling. Cleo refuses to be gushingly sympathetic. The post is agog with gossip and suspicion when Rita leaves and the colonel implores Cleo to give him information—unsuccessfully. Climaxing a series of domestic troubles between Cleo and Paul, Cleo puts Paul in the hospital by hitting him on the head with a vase.

After a serious time Paul pulls through due to a blood transfusion from Chick Adams, an old sweetheart of Cleo's. Paul's mother and father have arrived, called to the post because of their son's desperate illness. Cleo's father has also come. Cleo tells her father that she wounded Paul.

Paul's parents are unaware of this, but his mother makes herself unpleasant just the same.

PAUL'S MOTHER WADES IN I perhaps oughtn't to have told all this to my father, but it had been in my heart so long—I had kept it secret from everybody.
