RAIN BENEFIT TO OREGON CROPS SUMMARY STATES

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
PORTLAND, Sept. 3.—The summary of crop conditions in Oregon for the week ending September 1, issued by the United States department of agriculture follows:
Cool nights prevailed generally, but moderately high daytime temperatures were the rule in eastern and southern counties most of the week, and over practically the entire state in the closing days. Some light rain occurred in northwestern counties. There was a noticeable decrease in relative humidity toward the close of the week, but no serious outbreaks of forest fires were reported.

Cereals, little small grain remains to be harvested and threshing has made good progress. Corn has been somewhat improved by rain, but in some sections has suffered considerable from drought. Cutting of corn for ensilage is in progress. Seeding of winter wheat and barley is in progress in Wasco county. More rain is needed for fall plowing and seeding.

Fruit: Picking of prunes, peaches, pears, and evergreen quackberries is in progress. In some localities, apples have been benefited by rain.

Meadows, pastures, and ranges: Cutting of the third crop of alfalfa is nearing completion in the warmer districts. Water for irrigation of late hay crops is lacking in some of the smaller projects. Pastures and ranges are showing some improvement since the recent rains, but more rain is needed.

Livestock: Domestic stock in some localities continues to show the effect of short pasturage. Range stock is mostly in good condition. Movement of range lambs to market continues active.

Miscellaneous: Late potatoes and garden truck have been helped by rain in many places, but some late potatoes, which had partially ripened during the drought, are starting new growth. Melons and tomatoes are generally plentiful. Picking of the main hop crop is under way. Tobacco is growing well.

SHOCK ABSORBERS OF VILLAGE STRAINED BY SOCIETY CAPER

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 3.—The "Treasure Hunt" as a social pastime, an idea imported from England, has met opposition from village authorities of Hillsborough, exclusive millionaire suburb of San Francisco.

"The hunt" involves guests, divided in couples, rushing madly from clue to clue in search of a "treasure" hidden by their host. Speed is an essential in the game. Invitations were sent out by the wife of an old millionaire for a "hunt" next Saturday, but the village trustees have ordered Chief of Police Claude S. Hirschey to post men along Hillsborough's boulevards with orders to arrest all speeders, treasure hunters or not.

Mrs. J. T. Miller, one day last week.

Mrs. J. J. Poill and Stella Poill visited friends here last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Andrews were picking berries in our valley the last week.

Miss Olive Thompson, who has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. Arthur Williams, returned to her home in Portland this week.

Mr. J. T. Miller, recently made a trip to Portland, where he had not visited since he used to haul goods from there with a wagon and ox team, over 60 years ago.

Many changes have come since that time, and "Uncle John" could hardly find any trace of the old landmarks. Quite a difference, too, from jogging along with a yoke of oxen, and going in an automobile.

The many friends of Binger Hermann are sending good wishes for his complete restoration to health.

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today
By Idaho McGlone Gibson

Cleo Madison eloped with Lieutenant Paul Armstrong, U. S. A. It does not take Cleo long to discover marriage is not a path of roses. On the train, going to the army post, she has an allegorical dream indicating her future problems. The colonel, Arthur Blackley Beldon, of the post, is a "lady killer" and his actions have compromised Rita Thorne, the wife of a reprobate lieutenant.

Rita is innocent and Cleo forms an immediate and deep friendship for her. Rita, at Cleo's instigation, decides to leave the post and joins a vaudeville troupe under the name Rheda Thorwaldson. Paul has been having his troubles, chiefly liquor and gambling. Cleo refuses to be gushy with gossip and suspicion when Rita leaves and the colonel implores Cleo to give him information—unsuccessfully. Climaxing a series of domestic troubles between Cleo and Paul, Cleo puts Paul in the hospital by hitting him on the head with a vase.

After a serious illness, Paul awakes through due to a brain transfusion from Chick Adams, an old sweetheart of Cleo's. Paul's mother and father have arrived, called to the post because of their son's desperate illness. Cleo's father has also come.

Cleo tells her father that she would Paul.

Her parents are unaware of this, but her mother makes herself unpleasant just the same.

Cleo, alone in her home, is confronted by the drunken Lieut. Bill Thorne, who demands to know where his wife is.

He attempts to kill Cleo, but is accidentally killed himself as he struggles with Rhoda, who has rushed to Cleo's aid.

THE AFTERMATH
"What a terrible thing, Cleo, to happen in your house when Paul is away from home," said Mrs. Armstrong at this juncture. "I hope the whole thing will not get into the papers. Surely, colonel, you have enough authority to keep it all out."

I almost smiled, for my mother-in-law was using her best society manner as she spoke to Colonel Beldon. He, however, was paying very little attention to her. I could see he was much moved and much worried over the death of Lieut. Thorne. At last he seemed to take a sudden resolution. He wheeled about with military precision.

"My dear Mrs. Armstrong," he said, "will you and Mr. Madison walk across to the mess hall? I will send some one with you. Capt. Smith" he called to one of the young officers who had followed the crowd to the house. "Will you please escort Mrs. Armstrong and Mr. Madison over and see they sit at my table. I will be along presently. I want to talk a little with Mrs. Armstrong Junior while this whole matter is fresh in her mind. Then we will both join you at dinner, and afterwards we can go over and get Johnson's story."

As soon as Dad and Mrs. Armstrong left, Col. Beldon, instead of saying anything about Johnson, turned and led me to a seat.

"You're very pale, my dear child. I think I am going to nickname you the army petrel, for I don't believe there was ever so many momentous happenings at this post as since you came here."

He seated himself beside me and said: "Cleo, tell me where I can reach Rita. She must hear of her husband's death immediately."

As he spoke he seemed almost overcome.

"Poor Thorne," he exclaimed, "how much better it would have been if he had died in France!"

"He was a brave soldier, Cleo, but he had some little twist in his brain that made him overbearing, especially to women. A brave soldier is not always a good man. But whatever he was, he was Rita's husband and she must know."

"I don't know exactly where she is, colonel," I told him. "But it's somewhere quite near here. Paul's friend, Chick Adams, who is at the hospital, will know."

"Why should he know of Rita's whereabouts?" asked the colonel sharply.

"Because he left her somewhere in Texas just yesterday, on his way down here. In fact it was because he had been traveling with the company who put on the vaudeville skit of which she is a part that he decided to go out of town a little and come over and see Paul and me."

"What's he got to do with the vaudeville skit? I thought you told me one day that Mr. Adams was a very wealthy man."

"He is, he's been putting up the money for this skit. You see I wrote and asked him if he could find a place for Rita where her music would help her, and as it happened, two friends of his were putting on this skit just at that time and needed a woman who could play the piano and who would make a good appearance. He told me to send Rita along."

"She would do very well in a thing of that kind," said the colonel musingly. "I wonder I did not think of it the moment I found she was gone. Thank God now she will never have to work again. I'm going to send her a telegram to come here immediately, and next week we will be married."

I knew Col. Beldon did not realize what he was saying. I knew that Rita would not consent to anything of the kind. There had been gossip enough connected with the two names. I knew that Rita Thorne had been very much in love with Col. Beldon, but it seemed to me that when she told me of her troubles she did not care for him very much any more.

I wondered if her love for him had vanished just as mine had for Paul.

"I don't think she'll come back, colonel," I said.

"Why not?"

"In the first place, I don't think you would want her to when you come to yourself after all this excitement. If Rita would consent to marry you, you would want pay her all the difference possible, and you know how the gossips would talk if a hasty marriage should be arranged."

"I don't think she will come here, colonel. In fact, I shall send her a telegram telling her not to."

MOTHERS OF DAUGHTERS

Will Profit by reading Mrs. Quigg's Letter Telling How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her Daughter

Royersford, Pa.—"My daughter was sickly from the time she was 13 years old, she was irregular and also had severe headaches, and pains in her sides and back. She was this way about six months before I began giving her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helped her very much. She is no longer bothered by headaches, backaches, or cramping any more, and has not missed but one day. We recommend it to other mothers with girls who have these troubles."—Mrs. QUIGG, 210 Main Street, Royersford, Pa.

Finally I induced her to take the Vegetable Compound, too, and she has gained in health and strength and is now working steadily. I have told these facts to many mothers."—Mrs. HUDSON, 202 Euclid Street, Roxbury, Mass.
