Health—"The Blue Sky of Contentment!"

Although CHIROPRACTIC is one of the youngest of sciences, it is obvious that an increase, in 25 years, from one practicing Chiropractor with a few patients to 25,000 with hundreds of thousands of patients, could not be attained if Chiropractic were not securely founded on scientific truths.

SUTHERLIN MAN'S PEPPERMINT CROP IS PROFITABLE

A. C. Brown, who has a well kept ranch east of Sutherlin has been experimenting with various crops the past several years with a view of producing something out of the ordinary crop line in this section and for which there is a good demand, says the Sutherlin Sun. Two years ago he produced a fine crop of egg plant, and he has experimented with several other crops now to this locality with more or less success.

Last spring Mr. Brown planted two acres of peppermint. His neighbors smiled and frequently mentioned something about mint juleps, but Mr. Brown, like a Ford car, kept pegging right along cultivating his crop and saying nothing.

On Wednesday of last week Mr. Brown cut a quarter acre of his peppermint crop and the following day loaded it on a truck and took it to Eugene, where it was processed in a still. This process required about two hours time, at the end of which over twenty pounds of essence had been secured from the truck load of peppermint. A test of the product proved it to be of the highest grade, and Mr. Brown was paid $11.50 a pound for the product, returning to Sutherlin with a check of $234.

During the present week Frank Thompson has taken two truck loads of Mr. Brown's peppermint to the Eugene still. From one of these loads 21 pounds of peppermint essence was extracted, for which Mr. Brown received $241.50. The other load which was small, yielded 12 pounds of essence, for which a check for $138 was received.

Since the returns from Mr. Brown's peppermint crop became known, none of his neighbors has said a word about mint juleps, but on the other hand practically every rancher in his neighborhood is planning to grow several acres of peppermint next season. Mr. Brown is arranging to install a still on his ranch—for peppermint extract only—and next season will plant about ten acres of the crop. Experts at Salem stated that the peppermint grown on Mr. Brown's ranch is of a superior grade to that produced in several localities in the Willamette valley, and are of the opinion that the crop can be grown here with great success and much profit to growers.

Mr. Brown believes he will realize about $1800 from his two acres of peppermint.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped when Other Medicines Failed

Walpole, N. H. — "I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find it has improved my health wonderfully. For months and months I was not regular and had terrible pains. They used to affect my side so I could not work. I read of others being helped by the Vegetable Compound. I thought I might help me. I am very much better now, strong enough to do my own housework, and have two dear babies to care for besides. I tried other medicines before taking the Vegetable Compound, but I was never treated for my troubles. I speak highly of the Vegetable Compound to my friends and recommend it to any woman for rundown and nervous condition." — Mrs. T. H. FULLER, Walpole, New Hampshire.

THE HEART OF THE COLONEL

When I suggested to Col. Beldon to tell the truth and see what would happen, he seemed to take it that I was not talking of the investigation that had to be called, but that I was intimating that he never told the truth.

"I didn't expect that from you, Cleo," he said.

"You don't understand me, Colonel," I answered him. "You know as well as I that in an investigation of this kind as much as possible of the affair is hushed up. My army officers say to yourselves: 'The man is dead. Let's make it as easy for him as possible.' You must remember, however, that in this case both Rita and myself will be called upon to testify, if you tell the truth."

"Then I shall lie like a gentleman. I certainly shall keep both you and Rita out of it if possible. Come on, Cleo, let's go over to the hospital and find out if possible where Rita is. At least she must be informed of her husband's death."

"Don't you think, Colonel, it will be better for me to get Rita's address from Mr. Adams and talk to her over the long distance phone myself. I'm not sure that you should have anything to do with it. We want to keep your two names from being connected if it can be done."

"Then the Colonel broke down. 'Then, can't you see I must talk to Rita?' I have found since she has been away how much I love her. I do not think I could bear my life in the coming years without her. She is now free, and I want her—I want her. No other woman has come into my life who has filled it with the joy that Rita has. Her fresh, modern viewpoint—which is much the same as yours—has been something that has always taken me out of myself. I will tell you frankly, Cleo, that I've always felt that I was standing under a sword that might drop on me at any moment while he was alive. You know he has blackmailed me more or less ever since he was married."

"He knew that I loved Rita. Perhaps she will tell me now that she cares for me, for although she hated and feared her husband, and although she told me that I was the only person in all her life that had ever been good to her, she would never tell me that she loved me."

"I know that I am much older than she, but I also know that she has had such an experience with a younger man that I am sure if she intends to marry anyone it will be someone who is settled in life."

"I've been selfish with her, but a man is always selfish with the woman that he loves. There have been many times when I let her rest under the odium of malicious gossip rather than tell her that I was not going to call on her so often."

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today
By Idah McGlone Gibson

Cleo Madison eloped with Lieutenant Paul Armstrong, U. S. A. It does not take Cleo long to discover marriage is not a path of roses. On the train, going to the army post, she has an allegorical dream indicating her future problems. The colonel, Arthur Blakely Beldon, of the post, is a "killy" and his actions have compromised Rita Thordike, the wife of a reprobate lieutenant. Rita is innocent and Cleo forms an immediate and deep friendship for her. Rita, at Cleo's instigation, decides to leave the post and joins a vaudeville troupe under the name Rheda Thorwaldson. Paul has been having his troubles, chiefly liquor and gambling. Cleo refuses to be gushingly sympathetic. The post is agog with gossip and suspicion when Rita leaves and the colonel implores Cleo to give him information—unsuccessfully. Climaxing a series of domestic troubles between Cleo and Paul, Cleo puts Paul in the hospital by hitting him on the head with a vase. After a serious time Paul pulls through due to a blood transfusion from Chick Adams, an old sweetheart of Cleo's. Paul's mother and father have arrived, called to the post because of their son's desperate illness. Cleo's father has also come. Cleo tells her father that she would have married Paul if he had not been so unhappy at that moment. I was sure he had told me all this so that I would tell it to Rita—something I had no intention of doing. If he could not talk to her himself, he was trying to get someone else to be his advocate.

"You go to your dinner, Colonel," I said, "and be careful not to tell my mother more than you can help. I'm not the least bit hungry—I'm too excited to eat. I'll go over to the hospital and see Chick and take his advice about communicating with Rita."

I could feel Mrs. Ralston's eyes upon me from behind her curtain as I walked past the house to the hospital, and I knew that she had gone down to the mess to dinner because she waited to see when Col. Beldon would leave my house.

"Poor thing, she's starving to death," I said to myself, sarcastically, and I was more than ever determined that nothing could keep me at the post after my father had gone home.

Upon request I was ushered right up to Chick's room. I found him just eating his dinner. He was looking fine, although a little pale. He had not heard a word of the happenings of the afternoon, and when I told him about them he was greatly upset. He lost all sight of what really did happen because he could not see anything except that I had been near death.

"Are there any more crazy men around this dump?" he exclaimed. "Because if there are Paul and I will get out of bed this afternoon and take you away pronto."

Finally I got him back to where he could consider what was to be done about Rita.
