Increase Your Beauty and Look Younger

Delightful New Vanishing Cream Containing True Buttermilk Must Make You Look Years Younger or Money Back.

The old-time application of Buttermilk and Cream to whiten and preserve the skin and remove harsh little wrinkles and ugly sallowness is grandmother's recipe and women throughout the country are again using it to ensure a beautiful complexion and snow-white hands and arms.

Buttermilk, however, is not always obtainable, but a specialist has at last perfected a method of concentrating buttermilk and combining it with a perfect cream, which you can buy in small quantities ready for use at any first-class drug store by simply asking for "Howard's" Buttermilk Cream.

There is no secret about it nor is there any doubt about the result—it's just a common ordinary buttermilk in the form of a wonderful cream, gently massaged with the finger tips around the corners of the eyes and mouth.

Buttermilk Cream is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee of satisfaction or money back.

COAST GUARD IS ASKED TO PATROL RACE COURSE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—The job of the coast guard is not all in running doown rum chasers, nor in protecting navigation.

Right now the annual flood of requests is coming in for coast guard patrols for the regatta courses of the country during the big rowing events, and for cutters to take station for yacht races.

Among the events the cutters will police are the International Yacht Race, the Harvard-Yale Regatta at New London and the Intercollegiate Regatta at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. The job is to keep the course clear for the contending craft and to prevent the multitude of steam yachts, sailing boats, excursion steamers, row boats and motor launches that crowd in.

Supplementing the guard's patrol boats, the regatta committees usually supply launces which unfurl a Coast Guard flag and carry a Coast Guard officer to enforce order. In river races, where the waves from moving craft might endanger the shells, the guardsmen must keep the floating grandstands motionless.

Vessels offending continually may be fined $500 and the license of the officer in charge revoked.

We're in the business of turning out high grade laundry. We execute your orders neatly, promptly and cleanly. We know of several reasons why you should patronize this shop and not one reason why you should not.

FARM NEWS

Dusting seed wheat with copper carbonate for smut control has been proved the best method under many conditions in Oregon and growers can make their own dusting machine after the pattern described by G. W. Kable of the extension service in extension bulletin 381. An empty oil drum from a nearby garage and some inch water pipe, with a few pieces of lumber and some nuts and screws are about all that will be needed. The handy man on the farm can make it himself, as can most any farmer with the exception of cutting some threads on the pipe. A 50-gallon drum or barrel will treat two bushels at a time. Merely shoveling the grain over with dust added is not satisfactory ,and some type of duster is necessary.

Fruits or vegetables for canning need to be thoroughly washed as for cooking. Those with soil clinging to them need to be washed with special care, since the soil may contain many bacteria difficult to kill. Only fresh, clean sound materials are to be used. "Two hours from garden to can" is a good slogan.

A well-planted farm garden properly cared for invariably reduces the amount of food purchased and to this extent the cost of living. Proper management will keep the garden going in many districts of Oregon all through the fall and into early winter.

Use of more vegetables in the diet is essential to the best and most economical nurition. The homemaker has two things to do to bring about this larger use—know how to prepare them to preserve their nutrition and make them attractive and palatable, and teach the family the value of vegetables in the diet.

A new kind of anthracnose of apples has been identified by Dr. S. M. Zeller and Leroy Childs of the Oregon experiment stations and named by them the perennial canker. Growers had been finding it difficult to control some cases of anthracnose while others yielded readily to treatment. Thus led, the investigators suspected that there might be two kinds. A long and successful hunt showed that another form existed. The investigators have not been able so far to develtp a satisfactory control measure, but they are recommending certain treatments pending further investigation.

Light sandplaster applications have paid in experiments, and paid well off a short time. Large increases were obtained on some soils.

Apple and peach trees as well as bush fruits and brambles in western Oregon need a protective spray of Bordeaux mixture, 4-4-50, covering the bark and buds of the entire plant as a protection against apple cankers, peach blight, and small fruit diseases which attack during the fall rainy period and all winter. August is the best time for this spray, but early September is all right. Experiment station bulletin 201 tells how to make Bordeaux mixture. This bulletin will be sent free on request to O. A. C.

Vetch, a profitable crop in many districts of Oregon, is best grown in rotation, preferably with a cultivated crop like corn or potatoes, or a cereal. More weeds and disease hazards result from growing it continually year after year.

To produce a brilliant, clear jelly, it is necessary to have a clear fruit juice. Cloudiness is due to suspended bodies that cannot be removed by ordinary methods of filtration so some substance must be added to a fruit juice that will assist in removing this foreign material.

LEAGUE OFFICIAL SEES ECONOMIC STRUGGLE AS MENACE TO PEACE

CAMBRIDGE, Eng., Sep. 8.—Speaking on "Economic Disarmament," recently, Sir Arthur Salter, director of the economic and finance section of the League of Nations, said that of four main causes of war—dynastic, religious, political and economic—the last alone was likely to become continually more serious.

In the future, he said, the chief pre-occupation of the bulk of mankind would be a struggle for the means of life. Monopolistic or even preferential exploitation of supplies of raw matedials might at any moment threaten serious danger. The most dangerous word was "oil." The inevitable struggle for markets he declared would threaten peace in proportion as the power of armed governments was associated in the struggle, and intervened to secure unequal or preferential conditions proportionate to their strength.

If peace was to be preserved, Sir Arthur said, the armed power of governments must be more and more dissociated from the economic struggle. Discriminating and varying tariffs, used as a counterpart of general foreign policy, meant playing with fire. The main principles of economic and commercial policy should be internationalized.

WOMAN AVOIDS AN OPERATION

Awful Pains and Misery Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lima, Ohio.—"I want to tell you how your medicine has helped me. For weeks I suffered with awful pains from inflammation and I was in such misery that I had to bend double to get relief. I could not be touched or jarred, had awful pain all over my abdomen and could not touch my feet to the floor. It was impossible for me to straighten up and the pains never ceased. I took treatments for some time and finally was told I would have to have an operation. I do not believe in operations and I had read so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I told my husband I would try it before I gave up. I soon began to feel that it was doing me good. The awful misery began to leave me, also the backache. I have a good appetite and am gaining in weight. Taking this medicine was the best thing I ever did. I feel like it has saved my life and I do not hesitate to say so to my friends. It has saved me from a dreaded operation and I am still taking it."—Mrs. ETHEL THURSTON, 324 North Pine St., Lima, Ohio.

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today

By Idah McGlone Gibson

Cleo Madison eloped with Lieutenant Paul Armstrong, U. S. A. It does not take Cleo long to discover marriage is not a path of roses. On the train, going to the army post, she has an allegorical dream indicating her future problems. The colonel, Arthur Blakely Beldon, of the post, is a "lady killer" and his actions have compromised Rita Thorndike, the wife of a reprobate lieutenant. Rita is innocent ,and Cleo forms an immediate and deep friendship for her. Rita, at Cleo's instigation, decides to leave the post and joins a vaudeville troupe under the name Rheda Thorwaldson. Paul has been having his troubles, chefly liquor and gambling. Cleo refuses to be gushingly sypathetic. The post is agog with gossip and suspicion when Rita leaves and the colonel implores Cleo to give him information—unsuccessfully. Climaxing a series of domestic troubles between Cleo and Paul, Cleo puts Paul in the hospital by hitting him on the head with a vase. After a serious time Paul pulls through due to a blood transfusion from Chick Adams, an old sweetheart of Cleo's. Paul's mother and father have arrived, called to the post because of their son's desperate illness. Cleo's father has also come.

Cleo tells her father that she wounded Paul.

Paul's parents are unaware of this, but his mother makes herself unpleasant just the same.

Cleo, alone in her home, is confronted by the drunken Lieut. Bill Thorndike, husband of Rita, who demands to know where his wife is.

He attempts to kill Cleo, but is accidentally killed himself as he struggles with Johnson, who has rushed to Cleo's aid.

ARE ALL MEN ALIKE

Contrary to my judgment, Chick thought Rita should come on for the funeral, and because he thought this I exonerated Col. Beldon from the suspicion I had had that he had a selfish motive in bringing Rita back. I saw that after all, man is the conventional sex.

However, his conventionality is mostly vicarious. He wants his womenfolks to be conventional, so he may do as he pleased.

"I think we should send for Rita," said Chick. "She is playing this week in Galveston. She can get here without losing more than three or four days."

"I'm disappointed in you, Chick," I said somewhat impatiently. "You'd like to have Rita come here and play the hyprocite, just as Col. Beldon would. Lieut. Thorndike alive or dead, meant less than nothing to her. Why should she make that terribly fatiguing journey for the sake of some mythical tradition?"

"Don't you think that Rita would want to come, Cleo?" asked Chick in surprise.

"I do not. I suppose, however, we must tell her that he is dead, although I think it would be much kinder to keep it from her until after it is all over. Why is it, Chick, that we make such a fetish of paying respect to the dead at the cost of heartbreak and unhappiness to the living.

"Rita hated and abhorred Lieut. Thorndike. She had suffered untold indignities at his hands. When she left here, she thought she had left him forever. She had put him out of her life. Why should we bring her back, supposedly to mourn at his bier? I know if I were in her place, I would be very grateful to any one who would spare me having to attend the barbarious ceremony, with which we supposedly civilized people bury our dead.

"Don't look so horrified, Chick. You see you're beginning to know me. In fact, I am just beginning to know myself. I didn't have to think—I didn't have to have opinions; I didn't have to have responsibilities, in those long, happy days of our youth, so full of gayety and amusement. But I've had to think since I came down here, and I don't mind telling you it's been a deuce of a mess. I've come to the conclusion, Chick, that I'm going to run as straight as possible—oh, I don't mean straight in the way men use it when they speak of women; I mean straight as men use the word when speaking of their own sex. I don't mean to lie unless it's absolutely necessary, and then I shall lie like a gentleman, as was said of a famous king.

"I'm pretty brave, Chick—at least I think I am—but I don't think I'd be able to come back and be the star actor is an occasion such as you and Col. Belden are planning for poor Rita."

Chick looked at me, dear diary, with about the same expression as Col. Beldon had on his face when I told him the same thing.

"You can call me hard if you wish," I said, answering his thought "but if you do not know me as I am today, you ought to know me well enough to know I do not pretend to do unnecessary things. I will not tear at my heart just for the sake of having any one think I am one of those dear, unselfish little creatures that all men love. I will never do something to make others happy at any cost to myself. That is selfishness—but do you know any of your sex whose rule of life is any different?"

"Stop, Cleo, stop and tell me why you are so unhappy. You are unhappy, or you would not talk in this way. You have not been yourself since I came. Surely you are not worrying over Paul. He's going to get well all right."

"I know he's going to get well, thanks to you, Chick. I'm not worrying about that."

I was on the point of telling Chick my own troubles, dear diary, and then I thought to myself that he was the last person in whom I should confide. To keep from it I almost bolted out of the room.

Chick called me back before I had hardly gotten outside the door.

"Aren't you going to tell your old pal what's the matter between you and Paul?" he asked.

"How did you know there was anything the matter?" I asked in my own impulsive fashion, and then I clapped my hand over my mouth to keep from saying more.

"Of course I know, Cleo, that you had that quarrel with Paul, and he has shifted the subject whenever I have mentioned you to him."

"Chick," I said, "please do not ask me anything about Paul and me. He will probably tell you what he wants to when he gets better. Surely you must know that a family is not a very happy one where a wife shies a vase at her husband's head and nearly kills him. I will say this much, however—neither of us has come to any conclusion in the matter. Paul has hardly been in a condition to talk it over with me since he's been at the hospital, and now I've go this affair of Rita's on my hands. I must just wait, and I expect Paul feels the same, until we have talked over our affairs together, sanely and calmly."

BULGARIA AND JUGOSLAVIA REACH AGREEMENT ON TRANSFER OF MAIL

SOFIA, Sept. 8.—Negotiations which have extended over a prolonged period have resulted in the signing of a railroad operating convention by Jugoslavia and Bulgaria. It involves the transfer of mail from Bulgaria to Serbian trains and vice versa. In the agreement reached the railroad exchange center was left at Tsaribrod.

The railroad agreement was reached despite the fact that Serbia had suspended visaing or recognizing Bulgarian passports, owing to a protest lodged with the Bulgarian foreign office against the arrest of several Serbian subjects after the explosion in the cathedral of Sveta Nedelia. The controversy concerning the arrest has not yet been settled despite explanations and apoligies offered by Christo Kalfoff, the Bulgarian Minister of Foreign Affairs.
