OLD MARINERS BLINK AS DERELICT ROAMS HIGH SEA TWO YEARS

WASHINGTON, Sep. 11.—Men who go down to the sea in ships are speculating about the early appearance in West Indian waters of one of the most noted derelicts of modern times.

While the Navy Department's hydrographic office considers it unusual in these days of rapid radio communication and special coast guard patrol for a derelict to remain afloat longer than a week, the four-masted British lumber-laden schooner Governor Parr has been roving the high seas for nearly two years.

The last definite report received of the Governor Parr's whereabouts was in October of last year, when she floated crewless down along the coast of Africa, but the British steamer Tortugero late in July sighted a derelict 300 miles northeast of the Virgin Islands.

If this proves to be the Governor Parr, which seems likely, it will be the first derelict on record in the hydrographic office to practically cover the circulatory drift of the North Atlantic.

The Governor Parr set sail from Ingramport, N. S., for Buenos Aires on September 27, 1923. She encountered rough seas, lost two of her masts and the American steamer Schodack on October 3, 1923, took off the crew.

Floating in the trans-Atlantic shipping lanes, with a cargo of a million and a half feet of lumber, the derelict was picked up by the coast guard cutter Tampa early in January, 1924, and was headed for Halifax. Due to rough weather and the weight of the water-logged vessel the derelict was cast adrift.

In August of last year, seamen from the British steamer Zaria sighted the Governor Parr and boarded her, setting her afire. She apparently survived this experience, for later she was reported off the coast of Portugal and in October last off the coast of Africa, near the Canary Islands.

If the Governor Parr has continued to remain afloat, men conversant with oceanic conditions believe she would likely be carried by the northeast trade winds and the north equatorial current across the tropical North Atlantic and probably will be next sighted near the lesser Antilles.

England and the United States jointly patrol the North Atlantic ocean for derelicts, but naval men point out that these are hard to sight. Often derelicts are mistaken for porpoises and some of the forsaken craft turn turtle, their hulls being covered with barnacles and seaweed, giving them the color of the sea.

An old American warship, the Katahdin, which boasted of an underwater prow, was used in the latter part of the last century to ram derelicts, because she was enabled by peculiar construction to sail close to these menaces to navigation.

General use of radio has revolutionized the dissemination of information concerning derelicts. Urgent notice of menacing derelicts forwarded to the hydrographic office by the captain of a vessel is almost immediately broadcast through the radio sending station at Annapolis.

HAYHURST NOTES.

Mrs. Mae Cox and family, of Klamath Falls, were visiting at the home of Mrs. Cox' sister, Mrs. Arthur Williams, last Monday. Both families, and the George Potter families, of Scott's Valley, went to Cottage Grove on Sunday the 6th, where they held a family reunion with Mrs. Mame Trunnell, another sister.

Mrs. Ida Jones, and Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Roberts, and Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Kruse, made a trip to Tillamook last week, to visit Mr. and Mrs. James Miller. They made the trip in Mrs. Jones fine Buick car.

On Sunday last, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Miller has as guests to dinner: Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Benton, daughter, Barbara, and sons Robert, Ralph and Dickie Benton; also Mrs. Edythe Thompson of Yoncalla, and Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Miller, and daughters, Jaunita and Willetta, and their cousin, Miss Zuleme Tibbetts.

Dr. McKaig was called to Hayhurst recently. He reports the arrival of a wee son, at the home of Henry Moran.

Mrs. Jay Huntington and son, Jay Jr., were guests of Mrs. George Hamilton on Tuesday.

Mrs. Lee Allen and daughter, Mrs. Mabel Jones, were in Yoncalla last week.

The Kruse and Miller sawmill, is having a busy season. They are filling a number of orders for dressed lumber.

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Miller are enjoying listening in on their radio, presented to them by their son, Gilbert, on the occasion of his visit home in June.

I presume it will always remain a mystery as to how our item of last week (in which we intended to say that Mr. J. T. Miller recently made a trip to Reedsport and Scottsburg) could have gotten printed "Portland." "Uncle" John hauled goods from Scottsburg, by ox team more than 60 years ago. It did not sound reasonable to say: "He could hardly recognize any of old land marks" in connection with Portland. We were referring to old land marks of Scottsburg.

PIONEER CHURCH DEDICATES PLATE

A large crowd gathered at the Ten Mile M. E. church Sunday to dedicate a historial plate which was placed on the old pioneer building with appropriate ceremonies. The church is one of the oldest in the state of Oregon, and of the first trustees, J. G. Flook of Corvallis, is the only one living. Arthur Cloak, one of those who built the church was present, and Martin L. Bushnell, the only living charter member, who is 81 years of age now, was there. Several grandchildren, and great grandchildren of the pioneers who joined together to establish the church home, came for the dedication, and members of the Stoner family from Shannon, Oregon, former residents of Ten Mile, made the trip to Ten Mile for Sunday.

Dr. Danford preached in the morning, and Rev. Joseph Knotts in the afternoon, both paying loving tribute to the old pioneers who had labored under such difficulties in establishing a church home. The building is in better condition and more substantial at the present time than many more modern buildings, and unless some accident occurs will be good for many years yet. The lumber was planed by hand, and the foundation is of stone.

MILL OWNER KILLED WHEN CAUGHT BY MAIN DRIVE BELT

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

EUGENE, Ore., Sep. 11.—Wilbur A. Bourgeis, 41, president of the Bourgeis and Evans Lumber company of Noti, was instantly killed yesterday morning when he was caught on the main drive belt at the company's plant and dashed against a pile of lumber. His neck was broken when he struck the lumber. A bruise in the shoulder was the only other indication of injury.

Bourgeis was one of the owners of the mill, and had been connected with the firm about five years.

HEALTH BULLETIN

WHEN SCHOOL BEGINS.

(State Board of Health.)

September is an anxious time, not only for the students but also for the teacher. In addition to her regular work, the latter is worried by the various epidemics of children's diseases which make the beginning of school exciting. Each fall sees a new lot of children who have never had these diseases coming to school, so that a fertile field is offered.

Anything which keeps children in school saves their time and the taxpayer's money. A good deal can be done to hold down the spread of catching diseases, if certain precautions are observed. First of all, it does no good to allow a child to remain in school until its disease is well developed. Almost all of the common contagious diseases are at least as catching in the early stages, before they are recognized, as they are later on. It therefore is necessary to keep on guard, and pick up suspicious symptoms.

Whenever measles exists in a community, children must be watched for signs of "cold in the head." Any child appearing with a cold, unless it has already had measles, should be sent home at once, before it has a chance to spread the disease. This means that the children should be quickly looked over at the beginning of the day. Similarly, if scarlet fever or diphtheria are prevalent, every child who has a sore throat should be immediately excused from school, unless it has had these diseases. If the trouble is simply a cold or sore throat, the condition will clear up in a day or two, and the child can return. If it should develop into something more serious, many additional cases will have been stopped by quick action. If whooping cough is suspected, all children with a bad cough should be excluded. At any time, a child with a suspicious skin rash should at once be sent to a doctor.

It is better to keep one or two children out of school unnecessarily for a day or two than to have half the school away for weeks while they go through a siege of measles or whooping cough. Usually, by employing prompt measures, closing a school will be made unnecessary. Keeping children with suspicious symptoms out of school will do more to prevent the spread of diseases than all fumigation and quarantining of children who have already developed the disease.

MURDER CLUES ARE FOUND NEAR SUMMIT OF McKENZIE PASS

EUGENE, Ore., Sep. 11—Finding of a human skull and a pair of overalls by workmen on the McKenzie highway at the pass at the summit of the Cascades has led to belief in a possible murder committed some time ago. LENINGRAD HONORS AGED RUSSIAN PAINTER, FOE OF BOLSHVISM.

LENINGRAD, Sept. 11. — In commemoration of the 80th birthday of the famous Russian painter, Riepin, who is now living in Finland, an exhibition of his work has been opened at Leningrad. Chief attention was paid to his portraiture work. The exhibition contains also some of the less known work of Riepin as a sculptor, including busts of Leo Tolstoi and other Russian writers.

Riepin is known as an "irreconcilable" to the Bolsheviks. He left Russia immediately after the revolution, and despite numerous invitations to return, has declined to do so.

A BRIDE'S DIARY

A Love Story of Today

By Idah McGlone Gibson

Cleo Madison eloped with Lieutenant Paul Armstrong, U. S. A. It does not take Cleo long to discover marriage is not a path of roses. On the train, going to the army post, she has an allegorical dream indicating her future problems. The colonel, Arthur Blakely Beldon, of the post, is a "lady killer" and his actions have compromised Rita Thorndike, the wife of a reprobate lieutenant. Rita is innocent and Cleo forms an immediate and deep friendship for her. Rita, at Cleo's instigation, decides to leave the post and joins a vaudeville troupe under the name Rheda Thorwaldson. Paul has been having his troubles, chiefly liquor and gambling. Cleo refuses to be gushingly sypathetic. The post is agog with gossip and suspicion when Rita leaves and the colonel implores Cleo to give him information—unsuccessfully. Climaxing a series of domestic troubles between Cleo and Paul, Cleo puts Paul in the hospital by hitting him on the head with a vase. After a serious time Paul pulls through due to a blood transfusion from Chick Adams, an old sweetheart of Cleo's. Paul's mother and father have arrived, called to the post because of their son's desperate illness. Cleo's father has also come.

Cleo tells her father that she wounded Paul.

Paul's parents are unaware of this, but his mother makes herself unpleasant just the same.

Cleo, alone in her home, is confronted by the drunken Lieut. Bill Thorndike, husband of Rita, who demands to know where his wife is.

He attempts to kill Cleo, but is accidentally killed himself as he struggles with Johnson, who has rushed to Cleo's aid.

THE SOUL OF A FATHER

Dad's arm crept around me, he drew me toward him. I slowed the car down to five miles an hour and finally stopped. He didn't say anything for a long time. He just let me sob out some of my pain as I clung to him. At last he spoke, his voice was kind, pitiful, understanding.

"Cleo, you put before me the hardest task I ever attempted — hard, hard—so hard we parents cringe before it. We are afraid to face it. It is the problem telling our children about marriage. We do not do our duty by our children. We blind ourselves into thinking they will adjust themselves as we have done and our adjustments are often miserable makeshifts. We hope that the pain of reality will not be so great after age has cooled our children's blood as it has ours. We parents pray that they will interest themselves in other things — ambition will beckon children will come—anything to distract from marriage. This is but a cowardly trick on our part; when someone puts the case before us, just as you have been doing to me, it brings back all the searing pain, all the dull agony that was ours when youth died and, our bodies satiated, we had nothing to fall back upon.

"In answering you I will have to probe the long sealed caverns of my hearth—places that I never expected to open again and which leave me weak with pain as I peer into them now. All that you have said is true, my child, we do not understand, we do not know what that thing is youth calls 'love', that mocking thing which brings a man and a girl together almost without their volition.

"All the great minds of the world since time began, have been unable to fathom the mystery of it—why it comes, or why it goes; why it elevates some higher than the angels and why it hurls others into the sub-depths of hell.

"When I married your mother I thought she was the only woman in all the world. God, how I wanted her for my wife, but with marriage came fulfillment; I discovered that your mother and I were not a goddess and a god to whom all the hand maidens of love would pay devotion. The veil melted from my eyes and I saw truth—

"We were only two plodding human beings who could no more live continually in the rarified atmosphere of love than a prize fighter could live on humming birds legs. The realization of my earthliness nearly drove me insane with disappointement. What your mother thought, only God knows.

"I was not so much disappointed with your mother, Cleo, as I was with marriage—as I was with myself. I had thought I was capable of the highest appreciation and expression of love, and also I thought I was capable of making your mother's life and mine a perpetual illustration of our love's eternal verity. When I found that love could died, I was almost ready to deny that anything was eternal."

"Dad, did your love really die, as mine has?"

"Yes, my child, that intangible part of it that turns the whole world to an imaginary heaven. Don't you know that by the great lovers of history marriage has always been called 'Love's murderer?' Some people, though are fortunate enough to put another bet of emotions in the place of those that they have buried within their hearts. Affection, common tastes, interest in more material things—all these can fill up one's days. Your mother, as you know, went in for society. You were born to her. I became immersed in business. The days went on and on until we ceased to ask 'why.'"

"Did you talk it all over with Mother, Dad? What did she say?"

"No, that was the awful part of it. We neither of us would acknowledge to the other that that light which was not born on earth or sea had been withdrawn from us. Day by day we more or less adjusted ourselves to this different thing. We got the habit of each other. Cleo, and habit is perhaps one of the strongest bonds between husband and wife.

"I could not tell your mother what I am telling you. I would have been ashamed. But she also must have missed something which had been ours—a song of joy unutterable that now was mute."

I looked at my father, prosaic Daddy in surprise. It had never entered my mind that he could have had this devasting experience that had been mine. I never could dream that he and mother could have loved each other as Paul and I did in the first days of marriage.

And now my father was telling me that all the raptures and delights that Paul and I had known had been theirs. I had just found out that my father was really a poet, and so I realized how much harder it was for him than it would be for Paul to adjust himself.

My Daddy seemed to understand, for he rather shamefacedly continued:

"I expect you are surprised, Cleo, to hear your old blundering Dad talk of love's sweet song in the way I am doing, but I believe that in every human heart there is this poignant desire for the sweetness of life and the unutterable disappointment that comes when one finds it has gone forever."
