EVIDENCE FOR STATE BEGINS IN MURRAY CASE

SALEM, Ore., Oct. 8.—In keeping with the surprise and thrills which have marked his entire career of crime, the defense of Tom Murray, alleged leader of the three convicts who shot their way out of the Oregon prison August 12, killing two guards, did the unexpected again in outlining their case yesterday afternoon.

Instead of basing his case upon extenuating circumstances and seeking a verdict less severe than first degree murder as had been intimated in his opening statements and generally anticipated, Will R. King, chief counsel for the defense, told the jury that he expected to present evidence substantiating an acquittal on the grounds that Murray was so mistreated and persecuted during his confinement in the prison as to place his life in jeopardy, and to justify him in seeking to escape even at the cost of taking human life to secure his liberty.

In describing to the jury the various degrees of murder and the verdicts they were authorized by law to find, King explained that there were extenuating circumstances which, if not justifying acquittal, would amply support a finding of guilt of second degree murder or manslaughter.
