DIET AND HEALTH

less you want to do this you have to diet if you want to reduce.

However, exercise plays a very important part in the reducing program, and should be included, for while the actual destruction of fat during the exercise is very small, unless long continued, the speeding up of the internal chemical activities (metabolism) extends over the actual exercising period, and that means that more stored fuel is burned during the day. This stimulates the body and improves the general health.

AGED TIMBER MAN MEMORY POOR, HAS DISAPPEARED

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 3. — O. A. Ritan, 76, timber man of this city, disappeared yesterday afternoon and all efforts to find him have been unsuccessful. Mrs. Ritan drove her husband to the barber shop and while she parked the car around the corner, he disappeared, not entering the barbers.

Ritan has for some time been suffering loss of memory.

ASSESSSORS OF OREGON ASSEMBLE AT SALEM.

SALEM, Ore., Nov. 2. — The hearing of Oregon assessors before the state tax commission today was devoid of fireworks, although Governor Pierce questioned the assessors quite closely to ascertain how much of the tax burden is being borne by farm lands. He also questioned them as to levies made on intangibles, such as money, notes, accounts, bonds, etc.

Few of the county assessors are absent. The commission is hearing requests relating to ratios between full and assessed valuation of property and the commission will meet Wednesday of this week to fix the ratios.

Tomorrow the assessors will hold their annual convention at Dallas.

Several railroad tax experts and attorneys are here today, and occasionally inject questions to the assessors. They are working hard to limit the increase in railway assessments.

FRIENDS SAY SHE IS PICTURE OF HEALTH

"I cannot give Tanlac too many thanks for it brought back my health and strength after everything else failed, and nearly all hope of getting well had left me," is the grateful statement of Mrs. Sarah Duckett

"Stomach trouble and rheumatism had been gradually weakening me down for 20 years. At times I ached all over, could not walk without limping, and felt too weak to get out of my chair. Sleep was almost out of the question and I was nervous, discouraged and despondent.

"When I began taking Tanlac I was down to 120 lbs. but I now weigh 160 and haven't an ailment in the world. This is what Tanlac did for me four years ago and since then I have never been without it in the house. I take a bottle now and then and everyone says I am the picture of health."

What Tanlac has done for others, it can also do for you. For sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute.

WHAT MEN ADMIRE!

All men admire a healthy woman. She is not beautiful to them no matter how regular her features, if she is sickly, ailing. No chance of a marriage proposal for such a girl. If she is pale, weak and nervous, she is doomed to be an old maid. Fortunately for such a young woman there is an old reliable remedy that will restore charm and youthful bloom. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, made of herbs, will tone up the nerves, relieve woman's weaknesses, and with renewed health, beauty will follow. "SANDY"

By ELENORE MEHERIN

Sandy McNeil weds Ben Murillo, a foreigner with large wealth, to please her parents. She leaves the altar for a farewell meting with Timmy, and old sweetheart, in the garden of her home in Santa Barbara. She tells Judith Moore, a San Francisco cousin, who finds here there, that she cannot go with Murillo. But she does go on the honeymoon. At Lake Tahoe she meets the Santa Barbara boy friends who invite the couple to a dinner dance. Murillo locks her in her room. Angered by this and other indignities, Sandy flees to her home, and Murillo in a rage, follows her there and plans to take forceful possession of her. Sandy vows she will not return to him. She asks Judith to help her.

CHAPTER 15

Sandy held spools of silk thread to the light. "This is the shade, Mrs. March."

Mrs. March, a squatty little woman who looks like a beetle and wore glasses on the end of her nose, came from behind the counter. She surveyed Sandy.

A wave of color flew into Sandy's pale cheeks. Why was that woman staring at her?

"My, you're looking lovely, Mrs. Murillo. You do wear lavender something beautiful!"

Sandy laughed, caught a glimpse of herself in the mirror with the big, droopy hat, the sport frock of orchid. She pushed the hair at her ears. Her hands were freezing; her neck on fire.

Of course she looked lovely! Did any one need to stare at her and comment about it?

She walked rapidly up the block. But she stopped whenever she caught her reflection in the store windows. She glanced with a stealthy, agonized intensity at these images.

An odd hot dialogue went on in her mind. "It's not so! Of course it's not!"

"Oh, don't be such a fool! You know it's so!"

"But what will I do? God, what CAN I do?"

"Face it! You'll face it."

"I'll not face it! I won't! I won't.

She tore along as though she would fly out of her own body. This incredible thing happening to her! No—other people were cowed by Life. But she was so slim, so tall, so very breezy and do as you please! She was that gay, light-hearted Sandy McNeil who snapped her fingers with an impudent laugh and dared anyone to high-hat her. Let Life shake its old gray fingers—she'd get by!

And even now she tried to fling back her head. She said a hundred times a day as though her scared, piteous denial was going to alter the fact: "No—it's not so. God—don't let it be—it's not!"

It was evening early in September. Clouds drifted like silver flowers across the mountain tops. They kept drifting and drifting, new ones blooming as the first ones were lost. All along they drifted, a music in the blue lanes of the sky. The sky was blue and clear like that last April—that Sunday of the picnic, and she had come running out this gate giggling to have made the sneak so cleverly.

She pushed the rusty hinge, went in quietly and sat hidden in the shrubs. Then she took off her hat, shaking back the red, shiny hair. She thought of her bridal night, standing here with Timmy, tilting her face backward for him to kiss. She belonged to herself then.

Then she thought of that walled-in garden and Murillo coming upon her, leading her back, the moon floating in a golden mist. Why hadn't she run away then before it was too late—why hadn't she flown—no matter where?

But, no, she had gone back like a weak, puny hearted thing! She deserved this. She thought in a fury of resentful stillness. "Don't stamp your feet now; it won't do any good! No good to scream; it's true!"

Every time she said "it's true" things went clashing wild in her thoughts. Strike out her hands, beat off these closing walls. Strike out and get free—somehow anyhow.

She could have hurled herself on the ground and given up to uncontrollable sobbing. Nothing could equal the poisonous bitterness of her self-reproaches. If she had nly known—if she had nly thought — If she had only hearened them to the end—if she'd only run away beforehand.

She came back always to the deadly conclusion. "Ts too late now! You're beat!"

All last night she lay awake defying this. She wasn't beat. She would leave anyway. She would fight the thing out alone—meet it by herself.

What good would that do? Run to the farthest end of the earth, bury herself in the remotest island, it would still be his child—he would always be the father.

She felt Murillo's limp, moist hands on her shoulders, his lips pressed to her throat. Shame burned her scarlet — scarlet to the heart. Then she said, half weeping: "I won't have it! I won't!"

She hated herself. She put her hands behind her, the touch of her own flesh abhorrent. No longer her own—she didn't belong to herself. But she would! She'd kill herself—

"Oh, I can't go on like this." Her pulse thumped in a still alarm. Suppose she ran away Could she get a job? How long would she be able to work? Then could they come and bring her back?

Days and days of this. One night she crept from bed, gliding softly that Alice mightn't hear. She sat by the open window looking down at the grapevines. She felt desolate. The thing that had happened was viecious. The child was her enemy, it was his. She could never love it. .

Burning tears. Never love it! Not hers. His. She had to check the convulsive sob. It would never be his. Hers.

Then she felt a stirring of pity. Pity that she was to bring it here —a little helpless thing that would mean nothing to her, and she would never love it.

Why should she care for it? It was forcing her back to him. She had to go back. She knew this now. Lying awake hour after hour, she faced her own angry defiance. She asked: "What else can I do?" And she saw herself rushing to the city, throwing herself on Judith's hands.

No—but what else? Walk the streets? Borrow — steal — die. Yes— she could die. But she didn't want to die. She wanted to live—

Yet now she looked from the window and wondered if it would hurt very much to go crashing down there on the cement walk.

Murillo's house was finished. One morning Sandy's mother closed the door in that precise, gentle way of hers.

"Sandy, why are you so melancholy?"

"Many things."

"You shouldn't be. Every one has humored you. Other parents wouldn't have indulged you as we have."

"Oh."

"The house your husband has so wonderfully furnished is ready. For the sake of your mother and your family you can at least make one more effort. Won't you do this for me, Sandy?"

She sat very quiet, powerless, to force her lips to assent.

Murillo came. He said touchingly: "You have treated me very ill."

She looked at him with burning accusation: "Do you wish me to go to that house with you?"

"The house was made ready for you."

"Then I'll go on one condition —that you leave me entirely alone. I have ceased to be your wife."

His face flushed with a white, angry light: "It suits me perfectly!"

"If you break this promise I'll leave. No power on earth will stop me."

He knocked one fist against his palm and laughed harshly. "You'll find the doors open, my dear—wide open!"

Alice helped her pack the suitcases. "What made you chance, kid? Rather sudden, wasn't it?"

"No way out of it much that I could see. Family opens the door and tells me to beat it!" Sandy hid her face in an armful of silk. She laughed. Her shoulders shook. She laughed and laughed.

In the middle of the afternoon she drove with Murillo to the white stone house. He led the way up a broad staircase. He pushed open a door—a bedroom filled with flowers.

She found it hard to breathe. He said: "Yours, my dear. Shall I give you a key?"

MRS. GEORGE CARPY, FORMER RESIDENT OF ROSEBURG, DEAD

THE DALLES, Ore., Nov. 4.—Mrs. George Carpy, formerly of La Grande, died at a local hospital yesterday. Mrs. Carpy is survived by her husband, who was recently transferred to The Dalles land office from La Grande, and four sons, Willard and Stanley of Tacoma and Kenneth and Harold of Portland. The body will be sent to the Finley parlors, in Portland for burial. Mrs. Carpy was a sister of both the late Frank W. Benson, one time governor of Oregon, and H. L. Benson, supreme court judge of the state.

Mr. and Mrs. Carpy resided in Roseburg for several years during the time he was engaged in the abstract business. After the sale of that business Mr. Carpy entered the federal service and was immediately assigned to the land office at La Grande, to which city the family removed about 25 years ago.

GIGANTIC WAVE PLAYS TENPINS ON BOARD LINER

CHERBOURG, France, Nov. 4.—Thrown to the deck by the plunge of the steamer Berengaria into a gigantic wave last Saturday, a large number of passengers and members of the crew of the liner were injured.

The Berengaria, which left New York October 28 for Cherbourg and Southampton, met with a succession of storms throughout the voyage, culminating in a tempest which the commander declared was the worst he had ever encountered during his 32 years of seafaring.

When the Berengaria came into port last night to discharge her Cherbourg passengers, some fifty of them had arms in splints and heads bandaged and were suffering from sprained legs.

On Saturday when the vessel ran into the big tempest one big wave lifted her on her beam's end and the passengers and members of the crew who were on deck were whipped off their feet and thrown violently to the floor. It was this wave that was responsible for many of the casualties. The steamer was in the midst of the storm for 24 hours.

AGGIES FAVORED TO DEFEAT U. OF O.

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

EUGENE, Ore., Nov. 4.—With no games scheduled until the annual tilt with the Aggies, on November 14, the University of Oregon footballe team is again back to a schedule of regular workouts on Hayward Field.

The team suffered no losses in personnel in the Stanford game, and each man has but a single idea in view now—to beat the Aggies.

Oregon Agricultural College, long the strongest rival of Oregon teams is touted to win the annual football game between the two institutions this year, if the dope is to be considered. Oregon men, however, are pointing to the fact that the game will be their homecoming, and that with the advantage offered by playing on their home field, the Aggies will find stronger competition than may have been anticipated.
