Varsity Trains Grimly in Face of Adverse Odds

EUGENE, Ore., Nov. 9.—Faced with the grim task of training to meet a team outed seven by at least one and possibly two or more touchdowns, the University of Oregon grid men this week will settle down to finish up their drill for the annual Oregon-O. A. C. contest here Saturday.

The Aggies, with the best team they have had in years, are the slight favorites, since Oregon has lost every conference game she has played this year. However, the teams she has faced have been strong ones, and the dope always wavers when the two Oregon teams clash. Then it ceases to be a matter of football entirely and resolves itself into a bitter struggle of rivalry, friendly in its way, but none the less heart-felt.

Both teams will be in good shape for Saturday's game and fans are anticipating the hardest fought and closest contest of the season.

Aggies Not Lazing. CORVALLIS, Ore., Nov. 9.—Plenty of work still to be done before the Oregon game, was Coach Schissler's verdict following the Oregon Aggie victory of 56-0 over the scrappy little Pacific team Saturday.

"I was a little afraid the Aggies might be a bit stale," said Schissler, "but the game showed them full of snap and on their toes all the time. They played a good game, but plenty of work is necessary before we meet Oregon."

The play by which Averit ran back a kick off the length of the field for a touchdown was the first of its kind ever made on Bell Field by O. A. C. regulars, altho the rooks did it against Mount Angel College Friday on the opening play of the game.

Saturdays Score: Washington 13, Stanford 0; O. A. C. 56, Pacific 0; Multnomah 7, St. Marys 41; California 35, Wash. State 9; Whitman 9, Gonzaga 13; Idaho 14, Montana 29.

Comparison of French and English Housewives

It is said that the French working woman's only thoughts concern food and money. She certainly manipulates the former with great skill and, as is well known, her savings are the backbone of her country. Whenever a fresh loan is floated in France long queues of housewives are always waiting outside the banks with their money.

In running a household in France one soon finds out that the maids must be well fed. They will put up with sleeping accommodations which British maids would not tolerate, but there is no compromise on food, says a writer in London Answers.

A cook, though she will keep her pots and pans spotlessly clean, will not wash a floor with much zeal. The hardest-working French women, it is interesting to note, have, as a rule, perfectly kept hands.

French women tell me that there is more love in a French home than in a British one, and that they are more concerned with the family well-being than we are.

Gossip, largely keenly critical in character, is rife among better-class French women. Their talk, indeed, is criticism, criticism, and always criticism. There is jealousy for the woman who looks nice and launches for the one who doesn't. A French woman will not admit to age until it is really upon her. Then, socially, she becomes indeed a back number.

Spirit is said to be the keynote of a French woman's character. Armed with it, she never admits defeat, whether in the world of commerce or of conquest. And this spirit, with which she "downs" a rival, enables her also to cheer on her husband to fame and fortune.

Location of Famous London Well Unknown

Even before the Norman conquest the holy well of St. Clement, London, used to be the scene of many pilgrimages, and these continued until the Reformation. It used to be the favorite trysting place for lads and lassies on summer evenings, in the time when the Strand of London was a country road and not the important London thoroughfare it is today. The site of the old well is believed to lie somewhere between the law courts in the Strand and St. Clement's lane.

Within a few yards of the site of the well stands the church of St. Clement, whose bells are famed in nursery rhyme. Here Doctor Johnson used to have a pew, but there is no record of his ever having visited the well—which was only bricked over when the present law courts were built.—Kansas City Star.

Lifting Power of Love

Love lifts up the lowest to the highest, places the lowly born by the side of the bright particular star. It blinds us to earth; and when our loved one has been taken from us it lifts us to heaven. Who shall tell its glories and its victories? Without it a life passed is like a year gone by without any summer, cold, chilly, unfruitful, without pleasure or charm. With it the worst state is endurable. The palace is but a stable or an out-house without it—a very prison; the very prison when the loved one shares it is a palace. Such is particular love. When that, upon the freeing of our souls from this "muddy vesture of decay" which incloses it, has grown into general love for our fellows and love of adoration for our Maker we shall not be far off paradise, for indeed heaven's harmony is universal.—Hain Friswell.

Wanted His Share

He was a little, undersized, inoffensive-looking person. He had managed to get on the Broadway express at Times square by the simple expedient of holding his breath and allowing himself to be jammed into the train by the burly blue-coated guard. He found himself in a pocket formed by four men surrounding him. His chin reached up to about their knees. The atmosphere—what there was of it—was stifling. He managed to stand it for about two minutes. Then he twisted his neck up to the man in front of him and said: "Pardon me, sir, but would you mind holding your breath for a moment? I would like to get a mouthful for myself."—Mercury.

The Reason

"Do you remember, dear," said Mrs. Blank, "that before we were married you always offered me your left arm?" "Yes," replied her husband, "I wanted to have my right hand free. You see, I had a lover's fear that someone would try to take you away from me, and I always kept it in readiness for defense."

"How sweet! But how is it that now you usually offer me your right arm?" "Well, I am not so afraid as I was."

Costly to Grow Tall

"Sorry, but I can't insure you—you're too tall," said the agent to the man who wanted to take out an accident policy.

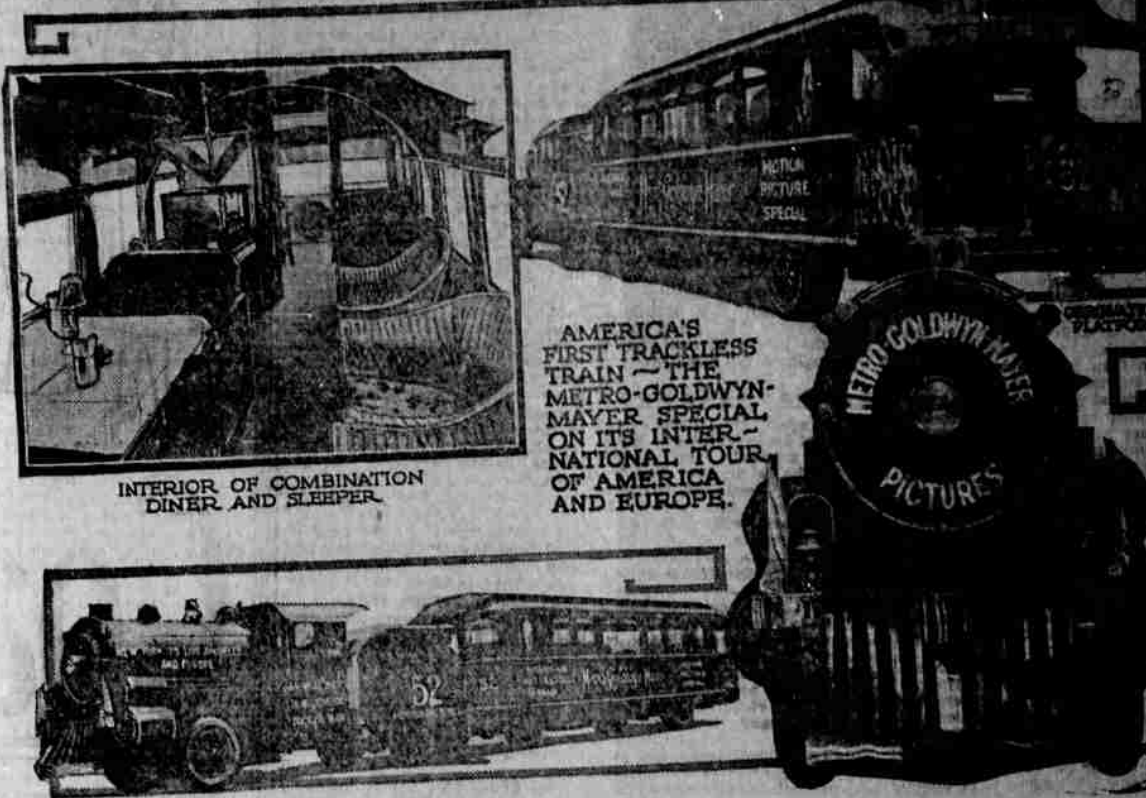

"Too tall? What's the matter with that?" protested the applicant. "And anyway I'm not as tall as my father was and he had no trouble getting insured."

"But your father," the agent explained, "was insured long ago when there was no chance of a fellow having his head knocked off by skidding airplanes."—American Legion Weekly.

Bavarian Throne for Crown Prince is Rumored Plot

BERLIN, Nov. 9.—Plans for an attempt to restore the Bavarian throne, with former Crown Prince Rupprecht as king, have been shelved because "the time is not ripe," for such a coup, the Frankfurter Zeitung learns on what it terms unimpeachable authority.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—An Exchange Telegraph Dispatch from Berlin says there are increasingly persistent rumors of an impending putsch in Bavaria. Prince Rupprecht seeking to seize the crown and recover his military powers. The monarchists fear that their supporters are gradually weakening with the passage of time and therefore consider it necessary to act immediately. The moment is said to be headed by the association of loyal Bavarians.

Heat with gas. SUPT. FLAX DEPT. AT STATE PRISON ACCEPTS DEMOTION

SALEM, Ore., Nov. 9.—Robert Crawford resigned today as superintendent of the flax industry at the state penitentiary, and Governor Pierce said that John J. Quinland, prison engineer, would now be in full charge of all industries at the penitentiary, including the flax and farming industries. The governor refused to make further comment on the change except to say: "I am not going to have any further clashing of authority at the penitentiary."

The change was announced by the Governor immediately after a very brief conference in his office early this morning with Crawford and Deputy Warden J. W. Little. The latter is acting warden during the absence of Warden A. M. Dalrymple, who is visiting eastern prisons and attending a national prison conference.

The governor said that Crawford would remain in the employ of the flax department. He has been superintendent since the beginning of the Pierce administration and also served in that capacity since the beginning of the Pierce administration and also served in that capacity for a time under the Withycombe and Olcott administrations.

"Prettiness" Makes No Appeal to Normal Boy

When nature hands on the good points of parents she invariably seems to be more generous to the boys than to the girls. Curly hair, long eyelashes and good complexions go to the boys more frequently than to the girls.

Notice the boys with natural "marcel" waves and curling eyelashes, and notice how they value them. A girl would be proud of them, but most men and boys are mortally ashamed to possess these advantages. They brush every time any one mentions eyelashes, while the curls are given frequent applications of water and brilliantine to restrain their wayward tendencies, says London Answers.

All this, while less fortunate stars try valiantly to possess those with scanty, sandy eyelashes, and spend a small fortune at the hairdresser's in an endeavor to take the lankness out of their uninteresting tresses!

Real Auburn tresses, too, are more often than not handed on to the boys. But there is one consolation. A girl thus endowed may refer to her tresses as "tiffin red," but a boy is never allowed to imagine that he is anything else but "ginger!"

Tree-Climbing Fish

In India there is a fish known as the tree-climbing perch. Technically the scientists call it "anabas testudineus scandens." By means of its fins and gills this fish can travel overland from one body of water to another. Its breathing apparatus is adapted for life out of the water. Stories about this fish's ability to climb trees should be taken with liberal portions of salt. The United States bureau of fisheries informs us that these tales of its tree-climbing propensity "are heritages from early travelers and are largely mythical." However, the climbing perch has been known to work its way upon stones and inclined tree trunks. This is as close as it ever comes to climbing trees.—Exchange.
