"SANDY"

By ELENORE MEHERIN

THE STORY SO FAR

Sandy McNeil, of Spanish lineage, marries Ben Murillo, a wealthy Italian, to please her impoverished family. She sacrifices her love for Timmy, a boyhood sweetheart. Her married life is a series of humiliations by Murillo. She writes to her cousin, Judith More, a San Francisco stenographer, for advice and possible assistance in her plight. Then discovery that a young life is hovering near, seems to cement her bondage. Murillo prevents friends of Sandy attending their housewarming. On one of her lonely walks she encounters Timmy and asks him to give her a "lift in his car. On reaching home she encounters Murillo's rage.

CHAPTER 21

The set look of Murillo's face, the grind of her fingers on her arm, made Sandy a little faint. "Did you have a nice walk?" he asked frigidly.

"Yes. I went too far. Luckily, just as I was about to collapse Timmy drove by and picked me up."

"How very convenient! You have the habit of being rescued."

Sandy's cheeks flamed. She stood an instant with her mouth open, as though she was about to speak, her eyes pouring on Murillo a blaze of contempt.

She turned her back on him to Timmy, who now stood with head averted and lowered.

"Goodby, Timmy! Awfully nice in you putting yourself out of the way you did. I hope you won't be too late for your engagement."

She made no attempt to smile. Her eyes, meeting Timmy's, confessed their shame and anger.

But she kept her head tilted high and walked very quietly to the house with her husband. She felt as though she were stepping through burning waves that rose even to her head, sank and rose again. Her anger surged and was overpowering like this.

It made her deaf to Murillo's hot muttering voice. He leaned close: "So this is the way you spend your afternoon? This accounts for the long walks? No wonder you have so much to laugh about. Nice conduct for a woman in your condition! If you didn't care about me or yourself, you might think about the child. Drifting up to the door! Bold, aren't you! Thought I wouldn't be here? Thought you would sneak in?"

She heard this. Miles distant from her. They crossed the threshold. Sandy twisted her arm free from his clinched fingers. She faced him. "What do you mean by this?"

"What do I mean!"

"Yes, what do you mean You think you can humiliate me before every friend I have? You think you can come out here and act like a maniac and I'll stand it? I won't."

"Then learn to behave yourself. Don't make a chippy of yourself every chance you get."

"You won't tell me what to do! Make up your mind for that. I don't need you or anyone belonging to you to teach me the proper caper."

"No? As long as you're my wife, I'll see that you conduct yourself as you should. I'll attend to that."

* * *

She walked up to him, her face white as death. "I wouldn't be youn wife, Ben Murillo, for one moment if I had only myself to consider. I started out to do the right thing. I meant to do this. You've shamed and dishonored me. You've ridden roughshod over every human sensibility. I tried to stand that.

"But I won't stand any more. I won't be outraged before every friend I ever had. You think you'll cancel invitations that I offer? You think you'll treat me like a slave in this house? You WILL NOT!"

His fingers doubled. "Ah, so that's it! You meant to do right! And the first chance you get, you flaunt yourself like a chippy before everyone. You pick my pockets and dash home! You make a laughing stock of me before this whole town! And I'm not to tell you what to do!"

He came up and caught Sandy's wrists: "You wouldn't be my wife for one moment, wouldn't you? What about me! What about me! Do you think, I'd have a — — like you in my house?"

She sprang from him, reeling. "Now—oh—I'll go now—now—"

"No, you won't! You'll wait two months. Then you can go! You can go then!"

She put up her hands, beating the fogs that began to swirl—chilly, gray, smothering. She fancied Murillo pushing her from the house; fancied him snatching the child, pushing her from it. She laughed sobbingly: "You mean to take it? You think you'll take it from me? Oh, you won't! It's MINE. You'll never get it! Never—"

She reached out her hands wildly, sought to steady herself against him; against the falling and fainting. She remembered nothing but the thudding of her head on the floor.

* * *

The doctor frowned. "I didn't expect this. She was perfectly well. You say she walked a long distance. She returned very tired?"

Murillo answered haggardly: "Yes! She fell before I could reach her. Don't you think you can save them?"

"I don't know."

Murillo covered his mouth; pressed it desperately. His hands were shaking.

* * *

Cold, dense clouds thronged before her. They made her dizzy; made the faces blur.

But voices were very sharp. They were shrill knives piercing through the dimness. They shouted: "I won't have a —— like you in my house! Wait two months! Then you go! Out you go!"

She tried to shout these voices down. She cried out: "No! Don't let him! Keep him away! Give it to me! It's mine! Give it — give it—"

She began to cry—faint, whimpering cries: "Where is it? bring it back—let me see—"

* * *

That night the child was born. The nurse moved about the white, bare room. Her cool, strong fingers touched on Sandy's pulse.

Sandy saw her. She wished to speak but she was buried so deeply in these waves and waves of fog. Finally she said. "My head hurts. But these words surprised her. They were not what she wanted to say. So she cried.

"There, now, you're all right! You musn't do that!"

"Where is it? Bring it to me!" Her hands reached out, feeling over the bed. "Where is it? bring it!"

"Soon—not yet—dear. Rest a little."

She tried to sit up. Firm, gentle hands touched her shoulders. Sandy hid his face and sobbed hysterically. "You won't tell me! Then I'll get up. I heard. I know. A little boy. I want to see it!"

"Hush now. In the morning I'll bring it. Sleep."

They were pushing her back—down again—deeper—deeper. She fought against this. She didn't want to be shoved down there where she saw Murillo's barred teeth; saw him snatching something; grabbing it from her—the child.

She cried out: "Keep him away and don't let him in." And she kept whimpering because they would bring it to her. She wanted it in her arms.

She woke up suddenly, her mind clearing. She said fearfully to the nurse: "It's dead? And you won't tell me? Did it die?"

"No; it's not dead. But it's very weak, because it came too soon. In the morning I'll bring it."

She cried all night about it. So in the morning they brought it to her. She could only look at it a moment. She mustn't touch it.

It was thin and red and wornlooking—little, emaciated, skinned-looking—thing. But her face—Sandy's own face. She could trace it in the tiny features. She saw Bob McNeil's charm and beauty. She gave a long, shivering laugh.

She saw tears in the nurse's eyes—the nurse turning, taking the baby away.

And she pleaded; she said eagerly; "It doesn't move. It doesn't cry. Is it alive?"

"Yes—it's alive."

"It's not going to die? Do you mean that it may not live?"

"We hope it's going to live."

Sandy put her hands over her face. "It must live—it's got to live!"

Says Dangerous Varicose Veins Can Be Reduced at Home

Rub Gently and Upward Toward the Heart as Blood in Veins Flows That Way

If you or any relative or friend is worried because of varicose veins, or bunches, the best advice that anyone in this world can give you is to ask your druggist for an original two-ounce bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) and apply night and morning to the swollen, enlarged veins. Soon you will notice that they are growing smaller and the treatment should be continued until the veins are of normal size. So penetrating and powerful is Emerald Oil that even Piles are quickly absorbed. All druggists.

Notice of sale of government timber, General Land Office, Washington, D. C., Sept. 23, 1925. Notice is hereby given that subject to the conditions and limitations of the acts of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat., 218), February 26, 1919 (40 Stat., 1179), and June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 758), and pursuant to departmental regulations of April 14, 1924 (50 L. D. 276), the timber on the following lands will be sold Nov. 16, 1925, at 10 o'clock A. M. at public auction at the U. S. land office at Roseburg, Oregon, to the highest bidder at not less than the appraised value as shown by this notice, sale to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The purchase price, with an additional sum of one-fifth of one per cent thereof, being commissions allowed, must be deposited at time of sale, money to be returned if sale is not approved, otherwise patent will issue for the timber, which must be removed within ten years. Bids will be received from citizens of the United States, associations of such citizens, and corporations organized under the laws of the United states, or any state, territory, or district thereof only. Upon application of a qualified purchaser, the timber on any legal subdivision will be offered separately before being included in any offer of a larger unit.
