DIET AND HEALTH

a magic wand had caused a transfer of their tastes, and the thin one had begun to eat as the fat one did, and vice versa. Do you suppose in six months they would have thought that dieting had nothing to do with their condition? No. Because they were absolutely wrong, and six months' time or even less would have proved it. Eating has ninety-nine points out of a hundred to do with the control of weight, if there is no organic disorder entering as a factor. And even if there is, we won't take off

"SANDY"

By ELENORE MEHERIN

THE STORY SO FAR.
Sandy McNeil, forced by her impoverished family into a loveless marriage with Ben Murillo, a rich Italian, sacrifices her love for Timmy, a childhood sweetheart. Murillo's tyranny and insolence causes her to write to Judith Moore, a San Francisco cousin, for help in escaping her marital bondage, but Judith is absent on a long vacation. A son is born, dying almost immediately in a mysterious illness. Sandy appeals to her Uncle Bob for financial aid to make her escape.

Go on with the story.

CHAPTER 25.

Sandy waited for the breakers. They came with exuberant bound, white-capped and sparkling. She threw her head back, took in a long tingling breath and with a leap flung through the trough. She rode up laughing, shaking the water from her eyes.

Evening—sunset colors in all that wall of mountains; the sky like a gay paragon opened in bands of flame and purple. Sandy came slowly to the beach, her pulses thrilling. She took in long, singing-breaths as though she would drink endlessly the peace and beauty of the tropic night.

It was two months since the day she went to her uncle. Two months since Bob McNeil covering her cold, shaking hands said to her: "Go back now, Sandy. Say nothing of this visit—nothing at all. The bit I can lend you won't do a particle of good, but that you can stay away as long as you like. Trust me, won't you?"

She didn't ask a question. She only knew the doctor had come. He had talked a long time with Murillo. And a week later Sandy came slowly to the beach, her pulses thrilling. She took in long, singing-breaths as though she would drink endlessly the peace and beauty of the tropic night.

"I am going to give you some specific points on how to gain. I have finished the special articles for our F. P. F. (Friendly Pat Fraternity), and now I'll give you T. T.'s a little attention. Tomorrow—Too-Too-Thin? (Part 2.)

EGGS AND CHICKENS BECOME CURRENCY IN THE NEAR EAST

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
ERIVAN, Armenia, Nov. 15.—Eggs are being used as currency in the Kara Kala district of Armenia where the American Near East Relief is operating. Twelve of the eggs are accepted on their "face value" as equivalent to one ruble, or fifty cents in American currency. If any of the eggs prove bad they may be returned as "illegal tender."

The new form of "currency" is made necessary owing to the difficulty of getting the regular Soviet money to Kara Kala, which is buried deep in the mountains of Armenia. A pair of American shoes in Kara Kala costs 200 eggs.

Miss Dorothy Stratton of New York City, who is in charge of the relief work in that area, reports that live chickens also are coming into use as currency, one chicken being accepted as a ruble and a half, or 75 cents in American money.

WOOL MARKET SHOWING UPWARD TENDENCIES

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
BOSTON, Nov. 14.—The Commercial Bulletin will say today: A broader, stronger market has ruled in wool during the past week. The tendency of wool values is upward in this market and the foreign markets generally has been active and strong. Australia has been against the buyer. Bradford is reported rather quiet but firm. Competition in the foreign primary markets is more general than at any time previously this season.

Scattered buying is reported in the west at about eastern market parity.

Mohair is rather quiet but firm. The Commercial Bulletin will publish the following quotations tomorrow:

Secured basis:
Oregon: Eastern No. 1 staple $1.30@1.32; fine and P. M. combing $1.25@1.28; eastern clothing $1.10@1.15; valley No. 1, $1.15@1.20.

Mohair: Best combing 75@80c; best carding 65@70c.

In some miraculous manner the hurt and the shame of the last year would be wiped out—Murillo would vanish. She laughed, thinking this. She would be Sandy McNeil again.

In spirit this fact was already accomplished. She couldn't help it. It was the bounding health returning, the magnetic charge of her spirits, the upsurge and vivrance of her youth.

It was easy to laugh. Who could help rejoicing when the break about one or when the choppy waters drop from the stroke? It was just as it had been in those April days when she swam with Timmy and found all the earth a hum with immortal gladness.

The surf riders came charging to the shore, their brown bodies gleaming.

Sandy watched them enviously. They said it was an easy thing to do.

Stealthily her eyes wandered till they saw, far out, an arm raised, the board flung on the waves and someone leaping upward. Her breath caught.

A tall, spare figure standing upright, head thrown back, arms balancing as the board flew through the water. He saw her, laughed. He looked like a Roman charioteer, exulting to rein his champing horses. Bronzed, sparkling, vital.

He shook his head vigorously, like a frolicsome dog: "Wait a moment," he called.

"I must go!" she whispered to herself. But she smiled and loitered. And felt the color sweeping to her cheeks.

She started in a quick walk up the beach. Someone running behind, catching her hand: "I said for you to wait!"

She laughed, wishing to look in the sunny, brown eyes—but afraid. He was very tall—with long, muscular arms and brown, sinewy arms.

His hair was tan. She liked to see his teeth gleaming when his lips that were full but well checked parted in his teasing smile.

"I thought you were going to ride the surf today?"

"I found it pleasant to swim."

"What a merry life! You found it easier. Tomorrow I'm going to teach you! Listen, will you dance with me tonight?"

She shook her head. "No, I don't know how to dance."

He squeezed her arm: "You're another, gal! He was watching her face with his pale, delicate features—the red, taunting mouth and the dark eyes.

She pulled off her swimming cap and her hair blew in shifty waves across her forehead. He said softly: "Sandy, I think you've spun me a long yarn about yourself."

"You're not married?"

"Yes, I am."

"Well, in the name of God, he must be bird, beast or fowl, then. Surely its no man that lets you run loose!"

She turned her face quietly from his intent gaze.

"You don't like that? But I'm forgiven? Tell me, what harm is it for you to dance? You swim and walk. Why can't you come to the dance with me?"

She laughed: "I'm tired at night."

"You're never tired."

"And I've letters to write and books to read."

"Then come for a ride tonight. You need the air. If you've read it for you to dance? You swim and walk. Why can't you come to the dance with me?"
