The Painted Shawl

Where Cool Breezes Blow, the Colorful Shawl Plays an Important Part

Shawls are no longer known as the fitting covering for the older woman only, but have become the choice of youth for charm and comfort.

Just now, when the vogue for painted things is at its height, the shawl which boasts painted posies on its silken surface becomes the height of chic.

On a background of mauve or pearl, the fashionable shops are displaying at their most favored shawls. On all white, vivid oranges and reds predominate, with purples and greens running a close second.

Quite the most exotic of the summer shawls are those which feature peacocks, dragons, and, in less colorful cases, ducks painted on a background of delicate charm.

Prings, deep and silky, becomes the favored finish of the shawl. It is such a shawl of painted beauty, with heavily fringed border, that Myrtle Stedman has selected to wear in the lovely settings of the First National film, "The Desert Flower."

Miss Stedman has selected a particularly pleasing shawl of silk whose bright posies have been painted with artistic effects, while the fringe adds a graceful note, and proves an effective covering for the cooler moments of summer.

EXPANSION OF BROCCOLI CROP DISCOURAGED

It is recommended that cauliflower be planted in the county with a minimum area of 200 acres as a means of distributing the marketing seasons of this crop and broccoli over the fall and spring periods respectively.

Canning Vegetables It is our recommendation that more vegetables be grown for marketing to the local cannery which will not only aid in furnishing a market for the same but will likewise be benefited by being kept busy during a longer period of the year.

Public Market It is our belief that there is a strong sentiment among producers toward the installation of a public market in the city of Roseburg and we hereby recommend that to this conference the committee of five farmers be appointed to meet the city authorities for the purpose of arrangement of suitable building and other details relative to the installation and maintenance of such a market.

Respectfully submitted, Vegetable Crops Committee, D. N. BUSENBARK, Chairman. Under the direction of Miss Sylvia Brown, secretary to County Agent Cooney, all of the reports presented by the various committees are being typed and placed in form for the printers.

Under the direction of Miss Sylvia Brown, secretary to County Agent Cooney, all of the reports presented by the various committees are being typed and placed in form for the printers. They will be forwarded to the Oregon Agricultural college where they will be arranged in a bulletin, which will be made available in the near future.

Reports have been made on livestock, timber, mining, fishing, general horticulture, farm crops, vegetable crops, prunes, dairying, poultry, home economics and club work.

It will take considerable time to get all of these reports into shape for printing and the bulletin will be quite voluminous. Because of the great length of these reports it is impossible to give them all at this time, but the News-Review believes that this information will be of interest to its readers and will publish the reports in future issues.

Reasonable expansion of Petite prune plantings in Douglas county is advised in the report of the prune crop, which submitted the following statement: The dried prune production of the United States for 1924 was something less than 250 million pounds.

Commercial fruit production in the United States has increased materially during recent years. For example, in 1917, the total carload shipment of all fruit was 27,223, while in 1923 the total was 43,397 cars.

Great Increase in Production Commercial fruit production in the United States has increased materially during recent years. For example, in 1917, the total carload shipment of all fruit was 27,223, while in 1923 the total was 43,397 cars.

National Requirements In this connection it is well to take into account the fruit requirements of the American people. How much more fruit can they be expected to consume at living prices to the producer?

Horticulture in Douglas County Present indications are that fruit growing is destined to continue as a major venture in Douglas county. Experience has shown that soil and climatic factors are well adapted to the culture of several horticultural crops.

Recommendations 1. Since the cost of producing a pound of prunes depends largely upon the yield per acre it is recommended that unless an orchard will produce one ton or more of dried prunes per acre that it is not likely to be profitable and the production should either be brought up to that point or the orchard be eliminated.

2. While the state economic conference held at Corvallis two years ago recommended that no new acreage should be planted except to fill economic units until consumption has at least caught up with production and prices have reached a higher level, it is felt that on account of Douglas county's particularly favorable climatic and soil conditions that a reasonable expansion on well selected soil of Petite prunes might be advisable.

3. Since the price of prunes is influenced by the size it is recommended that every effort should be made to increase the size by proper soil management and pruning. The quality can be very materially improved by the proper sizing of green prunes before going into the drier.

4. The committee also believes that there can be a large market developed for canned green prunes and they recommend that further encouragement be given to the local cannery to the end that a large amount of prunes may be marketed in this way.

5. The committee recognizes the fact that one of the greatest problems facing the prune grower is efficient marketing and distribution. The average consumption of prunes of the United States is one and a half pounds per capita.

Spitzenberg, Yellow Newtown, Orley and Delicious. Gravenstein, especially the red strain of this variety, appears to have future market possibilities.

Pear Production Figures show that during the past few years the pear has been extensively planted in the Pacific coast states. General pear planting throughout the northwest does not appear advisable at this time.

Nut Production The acreage of nut trees in the United States is rapidly increasing. California now has 106,000 acres of walnuts and is still planting at the rate of 5000 acres each year.

Peaches Peaches for Douglas county are recommended for local consumption only. It now appears that a few more peaches could be marketed to advantage.

Cherries Sweet cherries as a whole do well in Douglas county and indications are that some increase in the acreage of this fruit is justified.

Small Fruits Evergreen blackberries, Cutbert red raspberry, certain varieties of black raspberries and strawberries are adapted to Douglas county.

Need for Irrigation It has been a common experience in fruit districts that with advancing age trees require increasing amounts of moisture to properly mature a crop of fruit.

Sale of Diseased Fruit Attention is here called to the fact that fruit from neglected orchards frequently finds its way into the markets of this county.

Apple Recommendations It is generally agreed that an average production of the present apple acreage of the United States is sufficient to meet the demands of both the national and export trade.
