"SANDY"

By ELENORE MEHERIN

THE STORY SO FAR

Sandy McNeil, forced by her impoverished family into a loveless marriage with Ben Murillo, a rich Italian, sacrifices her love for Timmy, a childhood sweetheart. Murillo's tyranny and intolerance causes her to write to Judith Moore, a San Francisco cousin, for help in escaping her marital bondage. Judith is absent on a long vacation. A son is born, giving almost immediately in unresistible love. Sandy appeals to her Uncle Bob, who enables her to take a Honolulu trip with her mother. There she meets Ramon Worth, who drives and dances with her, and finally saves her life in the surf. On sailing for home she was surprised to find him a passenger.

Go on with the story.

CHAPTER 30

She smiled, lying so still in his arms. Floating down a sea of flowers, bring in the crook of his arm. She wished to tell him it was lovely. Let them go on and on.

He said hoarsely: "Are you all right, Sandy?"
"Oh, yes."
"Why in the world did you go out so far? It was the merest chance I saw you."

She laughed most faintly, her thought in a golden daze. She was drowning. He had brought her back. He was holding her, pouring on her face a look of abash and longing. She sank in it happily.

"Another moment, Sandy, I would have been too late." A tremor shot from his voice to his face. He let her down gently. "Can you walk?"

"Yes," she felt like shouting. "I can do anything!" Her mind was filled with light, with voices singing.

When he got her at the hotel that night she said raptly: "I'm so glad it was you, Ramon."
He looked at her quietly, the sunny eyes intent, a little fevered. "Why, Sandy?"

She reddened and evaded. "Oh, 'twas nice! Someone else might have given me a clip in the nose. You know they do that to drowning people."

She went with soft, excited steps to her room, her breath hard but sparkling.

A light glowed near the mirror. She looked at herself—the damp red hair matted in waves about her long, pale face; her eyes dark, glowing, eager; the parted lips reckless, a little frightened. The smile tugged at a laugh. Sandy whispered covertly: "Why am I so glad?"

She was a little nervous when he dropped on the sands the next afternoon. He wound the long, sinewy arms about his knee and smoked musingly.

She appraised the bronze profile, pleasing despite its irregularity. The eyebrows were tan, like his hair. They were thick and unruly, giving to the sunny eyes a look of careless tolerance. His chin was too short, but one forgot this because of the vital jaw and even, sparkling teeth.

"Ramon," she said capriciously, "how is it, such a charming fellow as yourself, has never married?"

"When I had the inclination, I hadn't the money. Now that I've a little cash, I've lost the inclination."
"Would you like to find it again?"

"No. Life's pleasant as it is. Sometimes I think marriage is immoral. Why?"

ad out to the water, pensively up-say.

In his turn he studied her—the long delicate sweep from her throat to the hands clasped in her lap; the pallor of her beautiful features. A line of freckles went along the bridge of her nose and lightly under her eyes. They gave her a pleasant look. He felt the tempo and fire behind the imperious tilt of her chin, the shadowed and often smouldering eyes.

The thought of this hidden flame ran in a little heat along his nerves. He brought a sudden dark color sweeping up under the bronze of his skin.

The exultance he had felt just night holding her in his arms, the sudden intensity of joy when she opened her eyes, her lips smiling—all this now made him cautious.

He had no wish to be carried off his feet by Sandy's charm. He felt quite equal to ending a flirtation the moment it became too serious.

He told himself this, yet he moved toward her, a steadily, flushed present in his pulse. "Fancy, why were you so glad it was I last night?"

"Well, weren't you glad it was I you had to rescue instead of some big barge of a woman? Didn't you find it thrilling? If it had been some thin, narrow little fellow he might have dropped me and I'd break my neck."

"But I remember the way you said it, Sandy. I didn't miss that."
She shrugged, but a sparkling and a fear in her heart: "You go! Then I guess, Ramon, you know you're quite the nicest person in the island at the present time."

"Only in the island?"
"That's the only place I happen to be at present."
"Sandy, you're staying here much longer than you intended?"
"No—not than I intended."
"But indefinitely, now?"
"I'm not sure. You'll stay forever, won't you?"

"No. But I'll be here as long as you are."
"Then you can have lots of fun." She thought with a twinge of his sentence: "The little love that comes with a laugh and leaves without a tear!"

She rose slowly: "I must go, Ramon." She was greatly disturbed.

Her mother had all the drawers of the bureau opened, her clothes dumped in hectic disorder on the floor.

Sandy stared. "Nice, warm day you select for your housecleaning, Isabelle!"

Mrs. McNeil glanced up excitedly: "Where were you, Sandy? I've sent for you. I got word from Ben. We're to leave tomorrow."

Sandy grew weak—fainting and weak. "Tomorrow, mother?"
"Yes—there's the cable. He has the passage for us."
"I can't do that. I can't get ready that soon!"
"I have your things all packed."

She met Ramon Worth in the garden. They went driving. She could hardly force her lips to speak.

Finally she said: "We leave on the boat tomorrow."
"Tomorrow?" he repeatedly blankly. "Why, you can't get passage now."
"It's all attended to."
And when she had convinced him, he said brusquely: "This is a hell of a shock!"

She laughed: "I came with a laugh, Ramon—I leave without a tear."
He remained very quiet. He scarcely spoke in the hour they had together.

As they started for home he said abruptly: "Sandy, I wish you'd kiss me goodbye."
"I can't do that."
"Why can't you?"
"Oh, what is the purpose? It's been awfully pleasant meeting you. You've been so friendly. Now I'm leaving. We may never see each other again. Why should I kiss you?"

Good God—Going back! They were on the boat hours before it was to sail. Sandy stood at the rail, her heart sinking. Would he come to see her off? He was walking on. A boy followed with suitcases. He was salting with them. She felt alive—alive with radiant fire.

ADVERTISING AND TELEPHONE CLOSELY LINKED TOGETHER

"You can say almost anything over the telephone nowadays," said Nathan Eckstein, president of Schwabacher Bros. & Company of Seattle, in addressing the Washington Press association annual meeting in Spokane.

When you use the telephone to order a definite brand or article, you know exactly what you want and you obtain what you order. The time of the purchaser and of the merchant and his clerks is saved. The store space required for the accommodation of people moving in and out or tarrying on the floor is reduced. The room needed for display and for stock is diminished. The space which must be lighted and heated is less. There is a saving all around.

Mr. Eckstein referred to the use of the telephone in buying in order to illustrate the point he was making to the newspaper publishers. He maintained that advertising justifies itself when it promotes and facilitates sales, shortens the time in making purchases. Promotes quick turnovers and thus reduces the volume of capital and the size of stocks that are tied up.

Advertising legitimately and intelligently done is a tax on no one, said Mr. Eckstein, for the reason that it proves a genuine economy in the scheme of modern business. Unless advertising performs that function "for which nobody pays because it produces a real saving," then it is maintained that it is wasteful and unjustified.

Mr. Eckstein is in constant demand to speak before various groups and business gatherings. His firm is one of the large wholesale grocery houses of the Pacific northwest.

INFLUX OF MEN TO PACIFIC COAST DISTRICT CONTINUES

PORTLAND, Nov. 21.—Although the number of men at present employed in Pacific slope industries is no less than it was one week ago, the steady influx of workers from other districts is gradually bringing about a condition of apparent acute unemployment, according to reports from 41 employment service offices in various northwestern cities received at 41 headquarters here. Fir logging and lumbering are busy as active, as they were last year at this time, the reports indicate, and general construction work has been in even greater volume.

Employment and industrial conditions in various Pacific northwest districts were reported as follows: Portland—Camps and mills in this district continue active. The number of unemployed men increasing daily.

Reynolds—South Bend, Wm.—Highway work completed. Sawmills active. More men than jobs here.

Aberdeen-Hoquiam, Wm.—Logging and sawmilling virtually at 100 per cent capacity. Few unemployed here.

Tacoma—Jobs offered fewest in many months. Skilled help well employed. Surplus of common labor from outside districts.

CONSTANT INSPECTS PLANE LANDINGS OF COAST STATES

(Associated Press Local Wire.)
SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 21.—Verne C. Gorst, of North Bend, Ore., head of the Western Air Express, bidder for the government contract on the proposed new air mail service between Seattle and Los Angeles, leaves today by plane for Seattle to investigate emergency landing fields and possible air routes.

He will stop at Concord, Calif., and Red Bluff and expects to reach Medford, Ore., about noon Sunday. Then he will proceed to Seattle by way of Portland. On his return he will continue south to Los Angeles, checking landing fields between San Francisco and the southern city.

Gorst will have six months in which to inaugurate the service if he and government postal authorities agree on terms. He points out that air mail service between the two points would effect a great saving in time and that, whereas the San Francisco-New York air mail, a distance of 2700 miles, has effected a saving of 41 hours the corresponding new Los Angeles-Seattle route, a distance of 1150 miles, would save 37 hours.

NOVEMBER VOLT FEATURES SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY

NOVEMBER VOLT . . . . . An article of interest to all of Southern Oregon appears in this month's issue of The Volt, which is devoted to the subject of sugar beet raising in Southern Oregon and northern California. It is perhaps not generally known that size were planted in Klamath and Siskiyou Counties the past year for the purpose of determining definitely whether or not sugar beets could be successfully grown in this territory. Now that the crops have been harvested and sent to the sugar factories, there remains no doubt as to the success of this new venture. The outcome of this extensive experiment is of much importance to all of Southern Oregon, for should a sugar beet factory be established in this vicinity, similar crops will no doubt be in evidence through-

RELEASED OREGON MURDERER FACING PORTLAND CHARGE

(Associated Press Local Wire.)
SALEM, Ore., Nov. 21.—R. L. Pettis, who was captured in Portland last night after he is alleged to have attempted the robbery of H. Greenberg, a tailor, was granted a commutation from life imprisonment to 15 years by Roy Ritter of Pendleton when Ritter was acting governor for several weeks the latter part of 1922, during the absence of Governor Osbolt.

The Pettis commutation was one of a long list of cases in which Ritter granted pardons, conditional pardons and commutations, resulting in severe criticism being leveled at him when these official actions became known.

Pettis' 15 years minus good time credit expired in April of this year and he was discharged. He was originally sentenced to life for murder committed in Wasco county in 1915.

Twice in This Woman's Life

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her from Sickness to Health

Ellensburg, Washington—"When I was first coming into womanhood I suffered terribly every month. My mother did everything she could think of, so she took me to several doctors and they only helped me a little. Mother was talking to another lady about my condition and she told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Mother got me six bottles and at the end of the first month I was much better, so I kept on taking it until I had no more pains. When I got married and had my first child I was in terrible pain so that it was impossible for me to do my housework. I thought of how the Vegetable Compound had been of so much benefit to me when I was a girl, so I went to Perier's Drug-Store and got six bottles. It sure did help me and I still take it. I am a well woman today and I can't say too much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I will answer any letter that comes to me to answer about what your medicine has done for me."—Mrs. WILLIAM CARVER, R. F. D. No. 2, Ellensburg, Wash.
