"SANDY"

By ELENORE MEHERIN

THE STORY SO FAR

Sandy McNeil, forced by her impoverished family into a loveless marriage with Ben Murrillo, a rich Italian, sacrifices her love for Timmy, a childhood sweetheart. Murrillo's tyranny and insolence causes her to write to Judith Moore, a San Francisco cousin, for help in escaping her marital bondage, but Judith is absent on a long vacation. A son is born, dying almost immediately. In utter loneliness, Sandy appeals to her Uncle Bob, who arranges for her to take a Honolulu trip with her mother. There she meets Ramon Worth, who drives and dances with her, and finally saves her life in the surf. On sailing for home she was surprised to find him a passenger.

Go on with the story.

CHAPTER 31

Sandy half covered her face in the blue hydrangeas that went in a garland from her neck to her knees, who hid her eyes and hid her roses. She was covered with flowers. Their perfume thrilled yet saddened her. She said, with a wistful gladness: "How could you get away, Ramon?"

"I could have left two weeks ago, Sandy."

"I wonder how you got passage."

"I'm here!"

She smiled. So he added, "You know I'm here because you are not?"

"I begin to have a faint suspicion of it."

"Someone was singing 'Aloha.' Throwing flowers at a departing guest. Laughter and the streaming, fragrant sunshine. Passengers so brilliant with the tropic blossoms hanging from their shoulders. The farewell song was taken up by a hundred throats—the sweet, haunting tenderness of the melody tossed from boat to shore."

She sang with all her heart, wishing so greatly to weep. The summer's interlude was over. Then he took the loveliest of the leis and wreathed them about her arms.

The boat moving—the islands of peace and enchantment drifting backward to the tranquil sky.

Sandy looked at the flying fishes making gandy splashes of color for swift moments above the water. She was crying, diving, and brightly down again to the deep sapphire sea.

"Did you ever see water so thrillingly blue?"

"At Carmel, sometimes. Have you ever been there, Sandy?"

"No."

"Then you shall come and pay me a visit."

"I thought you lived in San Francisco?"

"I did. But I've a little place off Monterey perched on a rock above the finest bit of ocean in the world. I'd like to show you the place. Sandy. When you get home, perhaps you might take a trip up to see me?"

"I don't know exactly what I'm going to do when I get home."

"You're not glad to be going home, are you?" He glanced at her with laughing eyes, winking and sober. "He wore white flannels, and with a line of flaming blossoms about his neck he looked summary and athletic and festive. Moments passed. She didn't answer. Finally she raised her eyes directly to his. "No, I'm not glad to be going home."

Instantly her cheeks were scarlet. "Oh, I think I'll go and see that Isabella is comfortable."

She felt unweary and childish and half smothered with her emotions. His words made graphic her return.

Mrs. McNeil was sitting in her berth. Flowers were scattered on the floor, their bright petals crushed. "It's so warm, Sandy. Well, it'll be nice to see them all again. I suppose Ben will bring the car up to take us back. Do you suppose Alice will be with him?" The trip would do her good. Poor girl! She doesn't get much pleasure in life, does she? How she would have enjoyed the islands!"

"I don't know."

"Yes, you do. You think you've a right to be happy, to laugh, to live. And you want to do all these things, don't you? They mean life to you. In your heart you feel that the whole world is yours and it's all before you, don't you? You do—let me have the kiss then."

man. She'd soon lose her sourness, if she got a nice, kind husband."

This was one of Mrs. McNeil's pet obsessions. She never gave up the idea that Alice would yet find her mate and settle down as every woman should. Every eligible man that came to her acquaintance was immediately appraised as a possible husband for the unclaimed Alice.

She would say: "If she'd only learn a little tact. Sandy, I wish you'd suggest to her not to make so many grimaces. If she'd just be natural and quiet. I'm sure she'd win out."

She now asked: "Isn't he about her age? And he certainly must have some money. All Alice needs is a little attention."

"And that would turn her from an adder to a turtle dove, would it, mother? I'll speak to Ramon about it. He'll be delighted, I'm certain. Men adore to have their conquests staged for them."

"Sandy—you won't mention such a thing! It wouldn't be unlike you! You wouldn't!"

Sandy was washing her hands at the small basin. She said absently: "There's five days before we need to bother about Alice, mother."

She clung to the thought of those five days. Her imagination prolonged the moments into hours, weeks, years. Five days yet—the two words became a paean. Five full days freedom—sweetness—joy.

Why should he darken them with forebodings? What had she to fear? Her problems were settled. Yet the mere mention of home disgusted her; filled her with uneasy dreads.

She stood on the upper deck. A moon, saffron-hued drew glimmering veils across the water. In its light the phosphorus showed in pools—flashing like opals living in the waves.

It was after midnight—quiet but for the lap-lap against the boat.

An hour ago Sandy had whispered: "I must go, Ramon." But he kept an arm about her, his hand pressed on hers.

Now he said: "You're unhappy, Sandy. Is it because of what I said this morning?"

"I don't know. Of course not. It's because things are."

"And you wish I knew nothing about you?"

"No. That wouldn't make much difference."

"You look like a person who should have everything on the earth, Sandy."

She laughed: "I feel like that kind of a person, Ramon. But isn't it strange, when little trifles may alter a whole life? For instance, such a thing as a battery on an automobile running down at the wrong moment."

"Well, how could that do it?"

"Oh, I don't know! But don't people do things quickly without much thinking? For instance, you packing your duds and grabbing this boat. You may change the course of your whole life."

"Are you that dangerous?" He stooped till his cheek was near to hers. "I've done quick things like this a good many years, Sandy. I hope I'll be doing them a decade or so more. What about you? Aren't you glad I'm alone? You'd be lonesome without me. Here—don't turn your face away."

"Yes—I will."

"But you'd like to kiss me. You said so."

"I'm not going to, though. Not again. But I'm glad you do know about me, Ramon. I wouldn't want you to think I'd kiss you or anyone even lightly if things were different than they are. I did before—of course. I mean, when I was a girl. But I would; now, I think it shallow and meaningless."

He felt the petal-like softness of her cheek. He could see the exquisite curve of her lips and the pale cheeks. He said huskily: "But things are different, Sandy. I know what you mean. You mean that the kind of great love you were talking about yesterday doesn't admit of any snatching at flowers along the wayside. But for those who haven't this great love?"

"I don't know."

"Yes, you do. You think you've a right to be happy, to laugh, to live. And you want to do all these things, don't you? They mean life to you. In your heart you feel that the whole world is yours and it's all before you, don't you? You do—let me have the kiss then."

N. UMPQUA ROAD MUST WAIT SENATOR McNARY IS TOLD

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 23.—No further work on the North Umpqua road, toward which a total of $110,000 from forest road funds has already been appropriated, can be undertaken for the present, Colonel W. B. Greeley, chief of the forestry service, informed Senator McNary today in response to an inquiry as to the present status of the highway.

The road, according to Colonel Greeley, has progressed for about 45 miles, including a section of about 14 miles that is now under construction and may be completed as far as Steamboat Creek by the end of the year. The cost of completing the 31 miles which will remain has been estimated at $310,000 for a low standard road.

DESPAIR AT LOSS OF EVERY GAME IS OREGON STIMULUS

(Associated Press Local Wire.) EUGENE, Ore., Nov. 23.—With everything to gain and nothing to lose, the tail-end coast conference football team, Oregon, will entertain for Seattle tomorrow to meet the conference leading University of Washington Huskies on Thanksgiving Day.

Oregon, losing every coast conference game she has played this year, has reached a devil-care attitude. The men are primed to pull starting plays at starting times, in a last effort to do something this year.

The fans expect Oregon to get another drubbing, and a bad one this time. The team doesn't expect it. That, the coaches say, is at least one good indication.

SNOW MOTOR SUCCESS IN MCKENZIE PASS

(Associated Press Local Wire.) EUGENE, Ore., Nov. 23.—After some difficulty during the past two weeks, due to mechanical problems, the new snow motor operated by the Eugene-Bend stage line proved its worth yesterday and negotiated the McKenzie Pass Sunday, according to reports brought back here.

The snow tractor climbed the snowbanks with ease and the prospects of all-winter stage service between here and Bend brightened as the snow covered pass was conquered.

CATTLEMEN TO ASK 10-YEAR LEASE ON GRAZING DOMAIN

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—President Coolidge was urged Saturday by Senator Cameron of Arizona to recommend in his message to Congress passage of a bill which would permit cattlemen in western states to lease public lands for grazing purposes, for a period of at least 10 years. Under existing conditions, the president was told, cattle raisers are permitted to use the public domain from year to year, but have no assurance that they will be awarded the same area in succeeding years and therefore have not been able to fence the lands and to put down water wells.

The historic rivalry between sheep raisers and cattle men of the west, said Cameron, has passed to such an extent that sheep men have joined with the cattle men in an effort to have grazing legislation enacted.

The Senate Public Lands committee, of which Cameron is a member, plans to present a bill at its next session providing for a 10-year lease. Regulations covering grazing permits are being drawn by the forestry service he said, pointing out that stock men would prefer that the fee system be based on the area of grazing land used instead of basing charges on number of cattle grazed, which is favored by the forestry service.
