GIRL LIBRARIAN ENCOURAGES JAIL INMATES TO READ

OTTUMWA, Iowa, Nov. 26.—Accompanied by a sturdy bailiff who carries an armload of books, Miss Harriet Meyers, assistant librarian here, each week visits the city jail to encourage cultivation of the reading habit.

One prisoner read four books on prohibition, and declared that if he had studied them earlier he never would have been arrested. Another studied along special lines so that when released he passed a civil service examination. Zane Grey, Harold Bell Wright, Peter B. Kyne and James Oliver Curwood are the popular authors, but there are many calls for books on music, etiquette and birds.

FAMOUS STEAMSHIP LINE PASSES INTO HISTORY BY SALE

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 26.—(A. P.)—On a dull November day 77 years ago, a great side-wheel steamer, her decks teeming with hummer, unkempt, but riotously joyous gold seekers, many of them hazy from tropical fever, came through the Golden Gate and anchored in the stream, the first steam vessel to enter this roadstead.

On the sparkling fall day in 1925 a trim freight craft, loaded to the Pilsnol mark with a rich cargo, was warped into a towering dock on the San Francisco water front and spun down the house flag from her main truck for the last time.

These two events marked the beginning and the end of the Pacific Mail Steamship company, oldest steam water carrier on the continent with the exception of the Cunard, and once credited with being the greatest of the world's ocean transportation companies.

From the time that the California paddled into the harbor until the trim Solana tied up and handed over her papers to her new owners, the history of this company was spiced with romance and shadowed deep by tragedy.

The California put to sea from New York on October 5, 1848, with a happy company bound for New Granada, far to the south where the Americas join, and for the Oregon wilderness. While she was on the way word came to her that gold had been discovered in California. The news brought on a sort of treasure madness to the ship's company. She moved swiftly down the Spanish Main under throbbing boilers until she came to the Isthmus of Panama. There the treasure seekers left her in one eager horde.

Their hope was to get to Panama and catch a boat there which would get them to the new Golconda before the California arrived. They drifted up the Chagres River in canoes poled along lazily by the coppery natives who would stop for rest at every shady place. They chafed the boulder lined trails that had been blazed out three centuries before by the Spanish conquerors bringing back the treasures of the Incas and the Aztecs. They fell and died of fever and exhaustion on the trails that have way to tangled jungle growth. A few plucky hundreds reached Panama at last—to find no ship there.

Many dropped from the dread Chagres fever while they waited. Other hundreds joined them from other ships. The California came in sight at last.

But 400 could get aboard and they packed in between decks, sweating, aching, but feverish with hope. The others were left behind to await other craft or to die.

A few weeks later, the California, her galley bare, her coal gone, but her devoted crew company, sustained by their great excitement, paddled into the harbor of San Francisco.

Captain John Marshall, the skipper, who curiously enough bore the name of the discoverer of gold, led one party into the hills and was lost to history. Another who fairly leaped over the California's side was William Van Voorhees, who later became Secretary of State of the United States.

The California waited and waited in the harbor, but her gold and mad crew never returned. Some historians say that the crew of the second ship of the line, the Oregon, was put in chains after her arrival in San Francisco, so that it could not yield to the siren call from the "jiggins."

The history of American finance would not be complete without frequent references to the Pacific Mail. Established in 1847 in New York by William H. Aspinwall and associates on a capitalization of $400,000 and with a mail subsidy of $199,000 annually from the government it had reached the towering capitalization of $2,000,000 by 1870.

In 1818, the company, hit hard by the war and other provisions of the Embargo Act, sold its big trans-Pacific lines, which had held Pacific trade supremacy for a quarter of a century, and substituted three smaller boats.

Later, the company acquired five boats of the President type under charter from the government. The sale of these boats to the Dollar Steamship company a few months ago marked the beginning of the end of the historic old carrier. The route between the Pacific and the Atlantic by way of the Panama canal was maintained for a time, but was finally disposed of, and the company was left with but one steamer, the Solana.

Just a few days ago the house flag of the Solana came down and the history of the famous American steamship company was at an end.

NEGROES BEATEN TO DEATH IN CHARGE AGAINST OFFICIAL

ALBEMARLE, N. C., Nov. 26.—Stories of how negro convicts were "beaten so unmercifully" that they died within a few hours are featuring the trial here of M. C. Crawford, Stanley county convict superintendent.

Eight witnesses testified yesterday of "barbaric cruelties" of Crawford, extending over a period of several years.

Some of the witnesses, white convicts, testified to having seen Crawford whip two negroes in an afternoon and that both men died that night.

PERSHING LABORS WITH DIFFICULTY TO END DISPUTE

(Associated Press Local Wire.)

ARICA, Nov. 26.—General John T. Pershing, head of the Tacna-Arica plebiscitarian commission, has replied to a second note of Augustin Edwards, Chilean member of the commission in which Senor Edwards reiterated Chile's demands that the commission fix dates for the registration of voters and the holding of the plebiscite to determine the ownership of the disputed provinces.

General Pershing is reported to have informed Senor Edwards that the commission would be called to meet at the earliest possible date and the presumption is that their work apparently has been re-made by Colonel Machand, commander of the carabinieri, that the Peruvians to request at an early Peruvian boundary delegation in-treatment of the Peruvian boundary meeting that the boundary com-mission delegation from fur-nisition investigating the charges ero.
