THE TEN MILE COMMUNITY CIRCLE MEETS

The Ten Mile Community Circle enjoyed a very pleasant afternoon when Mrs. Anna Watson was a charming hostess at her home December the 9th. The afternoon was namely spent in business transaction and conversation. They appointed two women to attend to the sending of some fruit as a Christmas gift to the Children's home at Corvallis. They also decided that each member would get a Christmas gift, and at the meeting to be held at Mrs. Edna Albro's home the 30th, they will choose names and find to whom the present is to be given. A very dainty lunch was served by the hostess. Enjoying Mrs. Watson's hospitality were the following: Emma Swift, Maggie Porter, Lottie Selgel, Lizzie Breitenbucher, Edna Albro, Anna Coats, Grace Barnes, Lena Powell, Sarah Moss, May Sibold, Victoria McDaniel, Katie McDaniel and Miss Eva Breitenbucher. Added guests were Mrs. Mamie Porter of Roseburg and Mrs. G. Watson.

The next meeting will be the annual election of officers, and all members are urged to be present.

"SANDY"

By ELENORE MEHERIN

WHAT HAS HAPPENED IN THE STORY SO FAR:

Sandy McNeil, in love with life, marries Ben Murillo, a rich Italian, to please her impoverished family. Tyranny by Murillo and frequent quarrels follow. A son dies at birth. Bob McNeil, her uncle, aids in plans for Sandy and her mother to take a trip to Honolulu. There she meets Ramon Worth, who saves her life in the surf. On the same steamer home he declares his love. Murillo declares he will never release her. Judith Moore, a cousin, tells Sandy love is everything. Murillo overtakes her as she goes for a tryst with Ramon. Follows a clash over her promises to her sick mother to give up plans for divorce. She appeals to Bob for aid in a divorce action and he tells her she has no grounds. Murillo takes her jewels from her, so that she cannot pawn them.

Go on with the story from here:

CHAPTER 48

"Redeem them any time you wish — next week, next month, next year." He came up and smiled in Sandy's eyes, letting his glance dwell on that pale, vivid face—inhaling sachet. He knew this little trick of hers—rubbing the powder into the roots of her hair. It now made him smile in appraising amusement.

She looked quietly over his head: "I won't redeem them — ever."

"You think you'll tire me out, do you; and I'll back down? I'll assist you to break the vows you made? If you hope that, my dear, you hope in vain."

"What do you gain by holding me?"

His smile curled. "I hold you, though, don't I? You understand this now. The gain is my affair. But you'll be held" — he backed to the door, bowed — "PERMANENTLY! Make no mistake about that!"

He stood a moment staring and smiling. Sandy pulled the negligee about her shoulders, flushing at the sudden realization of its flimsy transparence. Murillo laughed. "Good morning, my dear!"

She felt as though her cheeks were slapped and now stinging with shamed humiliation.

She began talking to herself, fighting to keep back scalding tears. "I won't stay here. I'll go! I don't care!"

Her uncle's words answered: "Where will you go? Don't talk wild. You can't 'sponge' on Judith. You couldn't stand that. She has no money. How much of her salary do you suppose Judith is allowed to keep? How long do you think you could last in the city without a job? How would you like coming back to him? You'd be forced to it."

She bit her fingers against her mouth, wanting to rush over and beat against the walls; hammer with her bare fists against them —furious and helpless.

"Held—PERMANENTLY!" He smiled when he said that. He gloated about it.

She thought frenziedly: "Why did he marry me He likes crushing me!"

Why did he choose her, knowing that she was high-spirited and brazen—a laughter-loving thing? He had taken her instead of Marjorie Lopez whom Beatrice wanted. Marjorie was a gushing, demure, submissive girl. She would have piously taken orders; given Murillo the servile adulation he craved. She would have exalted his ego; puffed him up with feelings of complacent mastership.

Why had he preferred a scoffing, insolent creature like herself? Just that he might break her to his will? That he might have that oblique pleasure some parents take in cowing a fiery child, or a man in taming a spirited horse? Yes—he wanted to twist her in two — make her scream and bow.

She flung back her head, keeping the eyes shut till the tears were gone. But she wouldn't bow! Wouldn't be crushed! He'd see!

She pulled the blanket from the bed with short, venomous yanks. Crush her! Let him try!

She ruffled out the sheets, making the bed with precise, flashing speed. Yes! Let him try! Bob was going to send over that typewriter. It would be put in Ida's room. She would practice —pound on those keys until her fingers were calloused — become expert. And then—

Fly to the city—get a job—own herself. Laugh at him—roar laughing at him.

She became suddenly quiet. And just as suddenly the blood went flaming up—up—over her neck—her lips—her temples. All her life Murillo would hold her! He would never let her free. Not yet 21, but doomed. Bound legally—no chance to escape.

She sank oppressively in the low chair at the window. This couldn't be—couldn't remain always so. Something would happen.

Clouds — dense blue, rimmed with fire—hung low over the distant islands; the channel waters were gray. Far out a ship unfurled a long banner of smoke against the sky.

She wished she was on that ship—wished that she were sailing to some remote, unknown land. Inconceivable that only death was going to release her. She said to herself vaguely: "It can't be! How can it be?" And she became indignant at Bob McNeil—saying she hadn't sufficient grounds!

And she planned ways of trapping Murillo—provoke him in public—goad him into some terrible public violence—

Her thoughts became reckless—flame and hardness entered them. Yesterday when Ramon followed her through grapevines, sweeping her in his arms, she had flushed with guilt as much as joy. Now she said to herself with a steely brightness, "I'm glad!"

Murillo thought he would shut her out from all the sparkle of life? He would deny her gayety and youth and all the intoxicating sweetness of love Would he? She pressed her burning cheeks against the window pane, hearing his menacing: "You'll be held—permanently." She answered with a desperate, frightened swiftness: "No, I won't!"

The typewriter came. Sandy said to Ida: "Will you let me put this in your room? I'm afraid the tapping will disturb Mr. Murillo. Besides, I don't want him to know I'm learning. He doesn't believe in a girl having such hobbies."

Ida looked at her with that peculiar compassion: "Yes—you put it here."

Sandy began to practice. The moment Murillo left in the morning she began. After a few hours her back ached. She was filled with resentment. But she kept at it, taking a pleasure in the pain.

At the end of a week she knew all the keys. She figured out the time it would take her to become an expert. Three months—that would be the least she could learn the typing and the shorthand — then she would pack up her things and bolt free—FREE!

She wrote this word a thousand times. . . . And she wrote: "He's nothing to me—nothing — less than nothing." The thought of his narrow shoulders and sneering smile made her blaze with contempt and shame.

He owned her. He was going to make her life destitute—see to it that she would never know what a beautiful love could be. He would keep her in this house a prisoner—compel her to grow old — starved and defrauded as Alice had been.

She thought about this, her senses taking fire. Only a weakling — a despicable weakling would submit—meekly submit to such a starvation.

She wouldn't! She knew what it was to stand in the moonlight clasped in strong, tender arms — knew what it was to have happy lips pressed warmly on hers — float in these arms dreamily down a sea of flowers.

She let herself daily with these images of herself and Ramon. She sat in Ida's room, the window on a level with the garden and flushed exultantly, recalling the fervor in his sunny eyes.

She read and reread his letters: "You don't want me to come, Sandy? Yes, you do! Why not? What harm can you do me? I'm not a boy, and I want to come. I think of you continually as you stood there in the dark. If I could only be a little sure that you came because of a feeling for me—a feeling even one-tenth as strong as mine for you! I love you. I recall the moment on the boat, when you reached your hands to my neck. Sandy—you wouldn't take the string of jade. You didn't want me to have so light a tie as this on you. But I'm bound to you now — bound by the hands you clasped about me—"

She went every day to the post-office to get these letters. She looked forward to Ramon's visits —a subtle feeling stealing through her thoughts.

One day Murillo accosted her as she was coming from the building: "What are you doing here?"

She had two letters, one from Judith and one from Ramon, in her hand. She clutched them.

"So you call here for your mail, do you?"

He made a grab for the hand where she held in passionate terror these letters.

DUNDEE-BOLES RETURN BATTLE ENDS IN A DRAW

with Archie Storey, the king-pin of his class in the Coos Bay country, whom the sports over there are ready to back to the limit. Storey fights at Woodward's weight of 142. He issued a challenge to the winner when Woodard fought Spec Woods in this city a month ago.

Dundee's next battle will probably be at Marshfield, and Boles will be his opponent for the third time, according to tentative plans. Boles' showing against Dundee in this city last night was easily good enough to entitle him to another try, and with the encouragement of his home town fans he stands an excellent chance of registering a victory. In any event, the crowd that sees the battle is assured of the worth of its money.

Berlenbach Wins Great Bout.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—The world's light heavyweight ring championship crown still rests on the head of Paul Berlenbach after a fiercely contested 15-round battle last night with the man who knocked him out in four rounds less than two years ago.

Jack Delaney, of Bridgeport, Conn., was several times within reach of another sensational triumph over the Astoria, N. Y., title holder before the 23,000 spectators in the new Madison Square Garden. But at the points when an aggressive offensive would seemingly have swept the champion to decisive defeat, Delaney hesitated, and waited to his sorrow.

Floored for a count of three in the fourth and punched groggy in the sixth and seventh, Berlenbach closed the last six rounds with a stirring rally, which saved for him the title he wrested from Mike McTigue.

His margin of victory was close, for newspaper men at the ringside gave him only seven rounds to six for the challenger while two were even.

Delaney was reeling under punches in the thirteenth and fourteenth but stuck to his task gamely and finished fighting back strongly.

Sencio Beats Pelz.

PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 12—Clever Sencio, Filipino flyweight, won a slashing 10-round fight from Benny Pelz, Portland, here last night. Although Sencio swarmed over Pelz, landing countless blows, he could not knock the latter from his feet. Pelz took only one round, the eighth, in which he cut loose with a burst of speed and carried the fight to his opponent.

In a ten round semi-windup Jack Reddick, Canadian light heavyweight champion, won an easy decision over young Peter Jackson, Portland negro.

R. A. PILCHER PAYS SHORT VISIT TO ROSEBURG STORE

R. A. Pilcher, owner and operator of the R. A. Pilcher chain of department stores, spent a short time in Roseburg yesterday afternoon on his way south to other cities of Southern Oregon and Northern California. Mr. Pilcher is looking over the territory visiting his stores and looking for new locations. He will visit Grants Pass, Medford and Ashland, and then go into Northern California.

He spent a short time in conference with Manager Dorr of the Roseburg store, and took a brief auto tour around the city and to a few of the nearby points of interest.
