should do so without reservation." Perahing's View Cited.

Many of Mitchell's charges against those in charge of the nation's air defenses were denied directly by General Nolan from the witness stand. He read several reports prepared by General Perahing as chief of staff, including the following:

"The air service on land should remain an auxiliary arm and a very important one in our service, available as now for independent use in mass or otherwise wherever necessary but always under the order of the commander in chief of the army. Our air service should be developed to every necessary extent, both as to personnel and material and it is especially necessary that aircraft production be established and maintained on such a basis as to be easily expanded in time of emergency."

The Week's letter, General Nolan said, was dictated by the secretary himself, and the general staff had no responsibility for it.
