PAPER DELIVERY TO SOUTHERN PART OF COUNTY IS DELAYED

Considerable complaint has come to the News-Review office during the past few days because subscribers in the extreme south end of the county are not receiving their paper until 24 hours later than usual. The News-Review management has done everything possible to remedy this matter, but finds it impossible to get any quicker delivery until after Christmas and must ask its patrons to be patient until after the holiday when the normal condition will be restored.

Papers for Dillard, Ruckles, Myrtle Creek and Riddle are carried south on train number 15 each evening. Points further south are served by train number 13, leaving here early in the morning.

Ordinarily number 13 reaches the southern part of the county in time to serve the stages carrying rural routes. Recently, however, because of the great Christmas mail rush, Number 13 has been divided into two sections. The first section does not carry mail, while the second section handles the mail. The second section during the past few days has been running from five to six hours behind schedule and consequently the papers do not reach the post offices in time to be taken out on the routes by the stages.

This condition will last only a few more days and the usual schedule will then be restored. The News-Review greatly regrets the delay now being met with in getting the papers to its subscribers promptly but the present situation is outside its control.

NOTICE TO REBEKAHS

A Christmas social will be held Tuesday evening, Dec. 22. All bring gifts worth 25c. Parents who bring children place their names on gifts.

A Week of Children's Cleaning

Do you know that a greater percentage of the school children go the entire year without a thought of having their outer clothing cleaned? Statistics show 500 cases of children's diseases during the later part of the year to one in the first part of the term due to personal and close contact with other children during school hours. Why fumigate the school room, take every precaution with their health, specialists for eyes, ears, nose, teeth, etc., watch for under nourishment and never pay any attention to the proper sanitation of their wearing apparel. During the week beginning December 28 there is being launched all over the land what is to be called a "National School Children's Clothes Cleaning Week." Don't let your child start the next term of school without a thorough and sanitary cleaning of all wearing apparel. Phone 227.

RAY CLARK MADE MANAGER OF NEW WINTHROP HOTEL

Ray W. Clark, formerly assistant manager of the Umpqua Hotel of this city, has been appointed manager of the New Winthrop Hotel at Tacoma, one of the finest hostelries in the entire Pacific Northwest, according to word received today by R. Scott Weaver of the Umpqua Hotel. Mr. Clark has been assistant manager of the hotel since its construction, and last week was called to San Francico, where he conferred with D. M. Linnard, president of the Linnard Hotels Incorporated, the New Winthrop being one of the ten Linnard hotels. He returned to Tacoma last Saturday and his appointment was made officially.

Mr. Clark has won rapid promotion in the hotel business because of his constant application and unfailing courtesy. He has worked hard to fit himself for the position of manager and is in every way qualified for the position which he now holds.

"SANDY"

By ELENORE MEHERIN

WHAT HAS HAPPENED IN THE STORY SO FAR:

Sandy McNeil, in love with life, marries Bob Murillo, a rich Italian, to please her impoverished family. Tyranny by Murillo and frequent quarrels follow. A son dies at birth. Bob McNeil, her uncle, aids in plans for Sandy and her mother to take a trip to Honolulu. There she meets Ramon Worth, who saves her life in the surf. On the same steamer home he declares his love. Murillo declares he will never release her. Judith Moore, a cousin, tells Sandy love is everything. Murillo overtakes her as she goes for a tryst with Ramon. He appears, unexpectedly, at a party she is giving for her friends. After the party he strikes her. She leaves his house and accepts the kindly attentions of Ramon, whose home she shares. Through her sister, who receives a letter from Murillo.

Go on with the story from here:

CHAPTER 55

Murillo's letter laid down the terms for Sandy's surrender. This he seemed to believe, would be swift and inevitable. She would forget his hand striking against her. She would even concede that her errors alone were responsible for his violence.

She read it, a wild heat in her mind. She whispered: "God! How I hate him!"

She ground her teeth, holding the page tightly before her. This was the letter:

"After your conduct of Saturday night you doubtless fear to return. I am writing this to say that my house is open to you. You may come back. You will find the door open and no anger cherished for the reckless manner of your departure.

"As your husband I feel it my duty to give you this chance to keep your marriage vows and to remind you that those vows are for life. I wish to safeguard you from the consequences of your defiance and folly.

"You probably are in a frame of mind now to appreciate the ease and comfort of the home I have made for you. It is still yours. You need only make up your mind to conduct yourself as a wife should. There will be no quarrel when you do your part.

"It is a year now since you have refused all wifely obligations, though you have not hesitated to demand more than wifely privileges. Looking back, you probably will realize that the benefits of this relationship are on your side, the burdens on mine. You probably will see that your refusal to accept all guidance, your determination to shirk your manifest duties, are responsible for any and all unpleasantness between us. I bore with you in the first year of our marriage because of your extreme youth.

"I believed that you would learn to appreciate the gravety of the step you had taken; that you would come to realize marriage is a life contract. I am still waiting for his awakening.

"My motives in marrying you were the highest. Aside from my emotional regard, which was great. I wished to found a home; I sought a mother for my children.

"From the beginning you have not seemed to understand these aspirations. You seem to have entered marriage as lightly as you entered flirtations.

"But I will remind you that you can not end it in this casual manner. I have kept sacredly the terms of our contract. I require only hat you do the same. If you have any lingering thought of a separation, dismiss it. You are my wife. I intend to hold you to the promises you made. These promises have a binding power which my principles don't permit me to ignore.

"I would also inform you that the law given a husband the right to correct his wife when her conduct is unseemly. Any impartial judge will admit that a man may point out to his wife the dangers of smoking and drinking and advise in matters of propriety. You have, therefore, no grounds for running out of this house as you did last Saturday. I was within my rights and can prove it.

"You will gain nothing but unpleasant notoriety if you make any efort to dispute this.

"I am willing to overlook the entire incident, to wipe it out completely. When you return you will find a welcome. I believe you acted on an impulse that you now regret. And I shall overlook the anxiety you caused me and receive you back. I shall ask no questions."

• • •

She twisted the letter . . . rolled it between her palms — then she smoothed it out, phrases leaping at her as though written in fire.

The right to correct her! To bring his fist against her cheek! No quarreling if she did her part!

Her part was to be the servant—more obsequious than a dog. Ask for no friends—no liberty—no laughter.

She got up and walked to the window, staring at the surf, flinging its lacy spray against the rocks. It's not worth thinking about! Go back to him? She would find a welcome!

She breathed in short, flaming gasps. Go back to that house and that sordid relation? No—she wasn't going back. She wouldn't be starved or beaten into it. She would do as Alice wrote — walk into the ocean — grimly walk into the ocean first.

She fixed her eyes on the waves and fancied herself climbing down the rocks, running along the sands—blindly—reaching the water, hurling herself down.

• • •

She thought with oppressive quiet: "I could do it!" She remembered the night in Honolulu when she had so nearly drowned—remembered the waters massing against her—breathing the waters, strangling with them — fighting the awful suffocation. She shuddered at the overpowering terror of that sensation. But she repeated. "I could do it!"

He meant to hold her for life. But she was gone now. And he would never find her . . . never drag her back. She would make sure of this.

Suddenly his offer: "I shall ask no questions," came softly into her mind. It made her tremble. She began to laugh, to repeat aloud: "No questions!"

She kept laughing. How magnanimous he was! He—but he thought she had run home that night. Thought she had gone to her mother or to May Arliss. He was sure of her. In his heart positive that she had neither deed nor thought to conceal. He could afford to be generous. Hadn't he married her after a night in a hillside cabin with Timmy!

But what if he knew of Ramon? What if he thought she had sped off in the night with another?

She became quiet—an oppressive heat pulsing outward from her veins. She had left Murillo finally. She had run off here with Ramon. She had no money — not even her clothes. And now?

She walked back to the fireplace—impetuously shoving these gnawing thoughts aside. "Now what!" she said, defiantly. "I'm happy! I'm free! I'm gladder than I've been in two years! I can get by. Others have—"

• • •

She picked up the other letters. They were from Ramon — filled with solicitude and eagedness for her happiness.

"How I hated leaving you there alone. Were you frightened? But you must rest and don't worry about anything. Why shouldn't you be glad, Sandy? What good will it do to regret the past? None, except to mar the present and the future? Twenty-one is far too early for such a program. Try to forget things that have made you unhappy and take the gladness you can find. There's plenty of it, darling. Nice place, isn't it? Nice ocean at your feet. I'm hoping to leave on the early train Saturday morning, and, if you invite me, will stay to dinner Saturday night. I love you—love you—you'll make out—"

She finished—read and reread the phraze that soothed her. In the lonely quiet of the room she drank them up. She saw Ramon as he had statched the dishes, looking at her with a boyish: "I've often pictured you here, Sandy. It seems perfectly natural. Does it to you?" Unthinkingly she pressed the letter against her lips. Immediately this aroused her. She scoffed, growing more and more fevered. "I'm crazy. It's so quiet here—so still. But I love him. Oh, you do not! You're crazy—"

She put her hands over her eyes. She was distracted and there was a squeezing and a burning that lay like a claw on her throat . . . that kept digging at her. It was Murillo's letter—one part of it that she tried desperately to ignore . . . the one true thing he said.

It was this:

"You seem to have entered marriage as lightly as you entered flirtations. But you can not end it in this casual manner."

• • •

She nodded, her eyes hot and wide fixed on the ceiling. Yes—lightly—breezily—thinking she could get by—what ho! A husband!

It was staggering to her now that she had been able to think in this manner—that no real effort had ever been made to discipline her. Yes—Isabel had done her best, but she had never realized the complete immaturity of a girl just 19. Sandy appeared grown — appeared rational. And she was, as far as the rationality of a girl of 19 goes—

But to herself now, the Sandy of two years ago appeared an appallingly half baked individual. True, she had made promises with no conception of their real solemnity.

And these promises were now to ruin the rest of her life? Murillo could keep her bound.

"No, he can't!" she whispered hotly, reaching down and burying her hands in the dog's neck.

She could scarcely breathe. She opened the door. The sun was setting—a ball, magenta colored, riding gently down the sky, touching the clouds with copper.

He couldn't keep her bound! Her life was her own—completely now. Live it as she pleased!

AMONG OLD FRIENDS

Interesting News of the Doings of Former Roseburg and Douglas County Residents.

EUGENE—While Mr. and Mrs. Norman Agee were away from the house at 657 Olive street into which they had just moved, it was broken into between 7 and 7:30 last night and a valuable diamond stick pin and a number of souvenir gold coins were stolen. The pin was valued at $200.

Mr. and Mrs. Agee had just left their trunks and suit cases at this house and had gone out for dinner. When they returned they found that the rear door had been broken open and their baggage rifled, according to a report made to the night police.

Besides the diamond, the burglar took a $1 gold piece, an octagon 50-cent gold piece and a 25-cent gold piece. A rifle and other articles of value were not touched and nothing else was missed, Mr. Agee told the police.

MEDFORD—Mr. Audley Ralph Eggers and Miss Gwen Elma Milledge were married last Saturday evening at eight o'clock at the Baptist parsonage. A number of friends and relatives witnessed the beautiful and impressive ring ceremony, performed by Dr. W. H. Eaton, who has known the bride since her babyhood. Howard Bearss acted as best man and Dorothy Eggers as bridesmaid. Other guests included Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Eggers, Gladys, Richmond, Norma Robinson, Willam Ament, Arthur Close and George Wittera.

Bride and groom are both well known and popular Medford young people. The groom is associated with his father in the Medford-Klamath Falls freight and stage line and the bride has been for quite a while secretary to City-Attorney John Carkin.

Mr. and Mrs. Eggers left Saturday evening for a wedding trip to California, after which they will be at home to their friends at 365 South Central.

SUITCASES STOLEN FROM AUTO PARKED ON JACKSON STREET

Two couples, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. De Guire and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Gustafson, of Silverton, arrived in this city Saturday and parked their car on the main street, while they went to a restaurant for a meal. While they were away two men ransacked their car, stealing two suitcases containing clothing and personal articles belonging to the women, dresses, lingerie and toilet articles being contained in the suitcases. The men then went to a local rooming house, where they emptied the suitcases, packing the contents in a suitbox, the proprietor being able to give the officers a good description of the men whom he saw leaving the rooming house. The suitcases were found emptied of everything except the marriage certificates of the two parties.

The theft was reported to Chief of Police Ketch, who upon investigation learned where the two men had stayed and located the suitcases. The proprietor of the rooming house told of the two men leaving with a suitbox apparently well stuffed with goods, and led the officer to the room where the looted suitcases were found.

The two couples were on their way to Marshfield, where the men are to be employed and went on to that place after giving the officers a description of the stolen goods.
