"SANDY"

By ELENORE MEHERIN

THE STORY SO FAR.
Sandy McNeil, in love with her, married Ben Murillo, a rich Italian, to please her impoverished family. Tyranny by Murillo and frequent quarrels follow. A son dies at birth. Bob McNeil, her uncle, aids in plans for Sandy and her mother to take a trip to Honolulu. There she meets Ramon Worth, who saves her life in the surf. On the same steamer home he declares his love. Murillo says he will never release her. Judith Moore, a cousin, tells Sandy she is everything. Murillo overtakes her, as she goes for a tryst with Ramon. He appears, unexpectedly, at a party she is giving for her friends. After the party he strikes her. She leaves his house and accepts the kindly attentions of Ramon, whose home she shares. Through her sister she receives a letter from Murillo, in which he lays down the terms for her surrender. Go on with the story from here:

CHAPTER 55.

Half of Sandy's clothes spread out on chairs, were drying before the fire; the other half she had found in a closet she had found an old long-sleeved robe. This was not a pleasant thought. More because she felt hostile and wished to defy an imaginary Ben Murillo than because she was enjoying them, she lit cigarette after cigarette as she pounded the iron back and forth over the white silk sport dress. She talked to herself. "He can advise me in matters of propriety! Correct my unseemly conduct!"

The iron swinging in a long, vicious stroke: "Oh, what do I care! Why should I think about it?" The iron slackening—tucks pressed down with elaborate care. "Better do it well! Only rag you've got—"

She hunched her elbows on the board, resting her chin in her palms. Saturday afternoon—a week gone, a week since she'd run so wildly from her home, putting her whole life definitely behind her. She didn't regret this step. She was blazingly, defiantly exultant about it. But now, staring at these few flimsy clothes, the rather terrifying poverty of her equipment for a new and different life made her suddenly very still.

"I can't stay on here forever," she whispered.

"No—but you've got to stay until you get some clothes—something! Why did you give Alice to understand that you'd grabbed a few things? She would have sent you some of hers."

She shrugged: "I wonder if I can get a job?" This she started to think of. She saw herself in the five-and-ten-cent store earning $16.50 a week. Bob McNeil said that was about the only thing she could do unless she was prepared. The picture was preposterous. Working behind a counter all the rest of her life—very likely!

Almost impulsively she now whispered: "I can stay here until I get the typing down pat. Why can't I stay here?" Immediately she grew warm and her breath hurried. "Why can't I?" she repeated angrily. "Oh, that old bunk! Men don't look at things that way today. I can stay if I want—"

Quickly, with a firm, challenging step, she walked up and down the long room, swinging her shoulders. An ideal place to stay. Lucky she had such a chance. As safe here as though she were buried—

Her steps lagged. She halted, an image of Ramon as he kissed her good-bye confronted her. He had laughed and flushed: "It's a thrill having you here, Sandy. It makes me feel as though we're married—you in this house!" She had laughed, too, liking the warmth of his eyes, liking the fire that flew along her nerves.

Well—what of that? Of course she liked Ramon. She liked many men. Easy for her to like them—

She refused vigorously to go any further with these thoughts. Saturday—he was coming to dinner. Eight o'clock he would come walking in.

Her cheeks stained and hot, she began to dress. She said: "Lord, it's quiet here! I wonder if there's any mail—"

There were three letters, two from Alice. The first caught Sandy like a spasm.

"The jig is up, Sandy! Alice had this habit of making a startling remark, following it up with something dramatic, extremely irritating to her listeners. The jig is up. Your husband knows you're all right. He means to get you back by hook or crook. I'll tell you how it happened. Wednesday afternoon after he left here, I dashed to your house, getting Mame to drive me. But he'd evidently good back himself, for he was there. I said to him: 'Has Sandy returned?'

"His face looked as though it were stretched. 'No, she hasn't.' I said as though crying or afraid: 'We'll have to do something. God knows what may have happened!'

"He had murder in his eyes: 'I believe you also know, Miss (get the Miss) McNeil! I propose to do something very quickly.'

"What do you propose to do?"

"That's my business!'

"Well, it's mine also!'

"You can go as you please, Miss McNeil."

"No chance, of course, to get your things. Whatever you come. When you can break into your room again in a week, I gave her the skeleton keys and told her to try it. She's strong for you."

"I'll and evidently he went at once and phoned to mamma. She gave him the goods—innocently, of course. She believes you're having a lovely visit with Judith. I gather from her account that your husband asked very considerably about her health and could he do anything for her. Of course, that touches her and she gets the wrong telling me Ben is such a good man and why isn't Sandy happy."

"I guess she asked when you were coming home. He answered: 'I'm not sure. Did she write to you mother?'

"Did she? Did she write to you mother?"

"I had a lovely letter. She and Judith are having a wonderful time!"

"That lets him see the lay of the land! He sees that she hasn't a suspicion of her, when or how you left. But he's dead sure I know all about it. He told me he was going to the city to get you."

"I wouldn't put it past him to put a detective on your trail. Watch your step, kid. He's a moon hollower. It's pretty tough that you're tied to him for life..."

Sandy opened the second letter. It was sharp. It set her pulse flying.

"Isn't this red hot? It can hardly believe it! ... the sanctimonious hypocrite! But I suppose he'll say you drove him to it."

Enclosed was a clipping from the Santa Barbara paper with Sandy's picture on the front page. Across the top was the heading, "Narrowly Escapes Death." There followed an account of an automobile accident on Wednesday night. Mr. and Mrs. Ben Murillo, returning from Los Angeles, were struck by another machine. By a miracle, it seemed, no one was hurt. Mr. Murillo and his wife were able to proceed homeward in their own machine.

The information stunned Sandy. Ben Murillo driving with a woman at midnight—passing her off as his wife!

Alice commented: "May Arlene rang up your house to find out about it and your husband tells her the newspapers made a mistake, that it was his sister and not his wife who was driving with him. Some alibi, isn't it? Wonder who the dame is? Gosh, if she doesn't get any more out of him than you did! Couldn't you use this alibi bit?"

For a reason that she didn't at first analyze, Sandy felt as though a weight dropped from her. She thought: "The plan! God-in-heaven! She went almost running to the beach. She rubbed her hands along her arm as though she were pushing chains from her."

His infidelity left her free. It dissolved even the moral ties he might still have held.

She looked at the wide stretch of water. Far out a whale sent a silver geyser upward. She thought: "I'm alone. I belong to myself now—"

These words made her cheeks burn. She went with a still, tightened expectancy back to the house. She dusted it. She put poppies that she had picked in the glowing field on the tables and shelves. Now and then she looked at the clock. Towards 8 o'clock she kept glancing to the door, peering into the shadows—

At 8 she heard a step. She closed the door quickly, clasping her hands against her chin. But she pulled it open, giving a quick, frantically "hush!"

Not Ramon, but a messenger boy, was coming up the walk. He had a telegram. Ramon wasn't coming.

LOWLY DESTINY CONFRONTS MILLION OF SO MUSTANGS
PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 22.—Out of the gorges of mountain range and plain into the scap vat or fertilizer bin is the ignominious destiny that seems in prospect for the western mustang—small, mostly useless, and numerous.

For those in the Pacific Northwest, this lowly end approached appreciably close when a Portland company began the construction of a plant in which this rendering will be done.

The sturdy, raving bands of undisciplined horsethief eat off the range that is needed by stockmen and upon which depends, to a large extent, the game in the western states. In Montana alone it is estimated that there are 250,000 of these wild horses. Other thousands populate the livestock interests of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Nevada and Colorado, swelling the total to a million or more for which no ordinary commercial market exists, except for the leather and by-product value.

Dr. E. E. Chase, Portland city veterinarian, has added to the indictment against the mustang a charge that it spreads contagious diseases among cattle and sheep.

ANCIENT ADOBE HOUSE BACK IN FAVOR IN CALIFORNIA

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 22.—(A.P.)—The humble sun-dried brick is coming back into popular favor in southern California as a material for the building of ranch houses, small homes and even pretentious dwellings.

"Adobe" was used by Franciscan fathers in the building of their missions, and later many homes and commercial structures were erected with these rudely made bricks.

At the years were on, however, adobe became primarily the stuff of brick or frame with a coating of stucco.

Lately, however, the old custom of using one's cellar excavation as a source of sun-dried bricks for walls has been revived, and everywhere in southern California modern small homes and ranch houses are being built of adobe. In Los Angeles, a number of exclusive residences, whose owners could well afford the most expensive of materials have been fashioned of the humble but historic adobe.

COPENHAGEN, Dec. 22.—(A.P.)—In America, one dodges automobiles, but here it is the bicycles. During working hours, the streets are alive with cyclists and in one day as many as 514,826 were counted in various points in the city.

While motor cars are increasing in number, the bicycles are increasing at a greater rate.

MEXICAN STATE OF SONORA OFFERS QUICK, EASY DIVORCE

NOGALES, Ariz., Dec. 10.—(A.P.)—The state of Sonora, Mexico, is contesting with Reno, Nevada, for the favor of those who want divorces and want them quick.

The new divorce law enacted in the state is most lenient and under its provisions the marital bonds can be severed in 15 days.

A former mercurial man to take up residence in the state and make his or her plea for divorce on the grounds of incompatibility and if not reunited to 15 days the final decree of divorce is granted.
