A Week of Children's Cleaning

Do you know that a greater percentage of the school children go the entire year without a thought of having their outer clothing cleaned? Statistics show 500 cases of children's diseases during the later part of the year to one in the first part of the term due to personal and close contact with other children during school hours. Why fumigate the school room, take every precaution with their health, specialists for eyes, ears, nose, teeth, etc., watch for under nourishment and never pay any attention to the proper sanitation of their wearing apparel. During the week beginning December 28 there is being launched all over the land what is to be called a "National School Children's Clothing Cleaning Week." Don't let your child start the next term of school without a thorough and sanitary cleaning of all wearing apparel. Phone 227.

"SANDY"

By ELENORE MEHERIN

THE STORY SO FAR. Sandy McNeil, in love with life, marries Ben Murillo, a rich fellow, to please her impoverished family. Tansy by Murillo and frequent quarrels follow. A son dies at birth. Bob McNeil, her uncle, aids in plans for Sandy and her mother to take a trip to Honolulu. There she meets Ramon Worth, who saves her life in the surf. On the same steamer home he declares his love. Murillo says he will never release her. Judith Moore, a cousin, tells Sandy love is everything. Murillo overtakes her as she goes for a tryst with Ramon. He appears, unexpectedly, at a party she is giving for her friends. After the party he strikes her. She leaves his house and accepts the kindly attentions of Ramon, whose home she shares. He spends a week there with her and then returns to his office in the city. Go on with the story from here:

CHAPTER 60

A month passed. She heard no word from her mother. The letters from Alice came at longer intervals. "Soon they'll forget me," Sandy thought, and she grew sick with the coldness in her heart. She looked forward all week to Saturday. Then Ramon came. Friday was a terrible day. She would sit at the typewriter holding herself there by main force, pretending to ignore the quickness of her breath, the burning and unrest. She would give up and go out to walk on the beach. Then the thoughts and questions pushed down with such desperate resolution broke loose. "What are you, Sandy McNeil? What have you done? Where is this going to end? Where CAN it end?"

And shocking phrases leaped to her tongue; phrases to characterize herself and her position here in this house of Ramon's.

At night she stood before a mirror, lost in the contemplation of her own image. She would smile at the pale, vivid face before her, thinking how young it seemed, how sweet and untried. There she was—just like that. No other Sandy existed—no reckless spirit who had thrown caution to the winds. She was this girlish image.

She bowed to it, assuming many different expressions, talking absently. "Girls adore themselves. Every girl, no matter how plain, can see attraction in her own face. Else why do we look at ourselves so much? I think I'm beautiful. My eyes are enchanting. Alice has the same thoughts. I've caught her gazing at herself ages at a stretch. She thinks she's far better looking than I."

Her pulse would begin to beat very quickly because these words were spoken to conceal her agitation. The agitation rose. She saw her own expression grow tense, the cords of her throat tighten. She murmured: "I look just the same. No one would guess. Why am I saying this? As though I cared! But I don't. It was inevitable. It was fated from the beginning. In the cards for me!"

She meant by this her relation with Ramon was foredoomed. She sometimes felt she'd been prophetically aware of it from their first meeting; she'd been certain of it from the night on the boat when her hands had so impetuously reached to his neck—when she kissed him in that moment of intoxicating, reckless joy.

So now it had happened. She lay awake smiling against the clash and fever.

Then he came. They drove and walked and swam. She abandoned herself to the giddy delight of companionship, the joy of someone striding along at her side; someone stooping unexpectedly for a swift, ardent kiss.

"This is living! This is gay and free and sweet. A right to it! Who gives a damn whether we're a right to it or not? I don't!" She said this to him once as she came laughing out of the water.

He looked stricken. He became quiet and sober. "I wish we had a right to it, Sandy. I wish we could get the right to it."

"We have. We think we have. What else counts?" "Nothing—nothing! We can shut out the world. We can live just for each other—"

She became oppressed. Shortly after this the woman at the post-office said to her: "Are you keeping the cottage through the summer?" "I'm not sure," Sandy answered hastily.

"I was wondering if you were leaving. In fact, I thought you had gone. I thought I saw Mr. Worth last Saturday."

Sandy turned her letters in a pretended absorption, feeling the blood creep hotly to her cheeks. "Oh, did you?" She ripped open an envelope, hurried from the place.

She became self-conscious, as though the whole village had found her out. They had all seen Ramon—they all knew he was home on Saturday and Sunday. There would be rumors of her. "Ugly things said."

"But you don't care," a voice reminded. "No, I don't care!"

And the woman in the post-office—all the men and women who might talk of her became hideous.

"They were small—bigoted—dead. They had no youth—no emotions."

"Why are these things wrong?" She thought of all the kind, thoughtful things Ramon did. How eager he was to please her. How delighted it was to run down from a hill hand in hand.

Imagine Ben Murillo doing such a thing! But that relation was right—and this one was wrong.

She paced the long, shadowy room listening to the throbbing stillness. She stopped before the typewriter, gave it a vicious shove. Suddenly she said aloud: "I know it well enough."

She became breathless and hot. Yes—she knew enough to get a job. For some time she had suppressed this admission—thinking "Next week!" She dreaded the thought of going into an office. She visualized herself going somewhere and asking for work—then keeping at this grind year after year.

It seemed incredible that she had really come to this pass—that no one was doing anything for her. They just let her go as though her fate was no longer any concern of theirs. She was out on her own.

"I'll get a job," she said quietly. Of course, get a job—she was now ashamed to think she had delayed this. She said aloud—feeling her flesh scalded: "What am I if I stay on here? Yes—what!"

But if she worked—when she was making her own way, then she could talk of freedom—of bravery.

There was a letter from her Uncle Bob McNeil. This confirming and hastened her resolution. He wrote:

"Dear little kid: Sorry I wasn't in these parts when all this happened. Just got in the other day and learned of the lowdown from Alice. Write me when you're working, and when I'm in Los Angeles I'll come and have lunch with you. Have you got a permanent job yet? I want to talk over your plans and aid you if I can."

"I'll want to see Murillo—talked hours with him. Don't figure on a divorce. He won't grant it. He can get it easily—without any trouble. All you would need is to write him a letter saying you have absolutely left him. But he is old-eyed. He says a divorce won't free him. He won't let you get it, and he won't get it himself."

"So that's pretty tough, little kid. But don't give up. I have a suspicion he's doing a bit of high flying. Of course, that's the hardest thing in the world to prove—but I'm on the job."

"In the meantime you'll get by. You know you always could. I'm enclosing this remembrance. If you need more now or later, I'm your uncle and don't forget it!" Enclosed was a check for $100.

Three days later Sandy went to San Jose. She answered ads. In a week she had a job as filing clerk in an insurance office. She earned $65 a month. Her board and room in a private family took $45 of this.

She wrote to Ramon. He came over the weekend. When it was dark they drove back along the coast.

He was excited and unnerved: "Now, Sandy—God—is this the beginning of the end?"

TURKISH WOMEN HAVE EXCLUSIVE PAGE IN JOURNAL

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 26.—Women are to have a page to themselves in a new Constantinople daily, the "people's paper." This innovation indicates a change of heart upon the part of Turkish press which two years ago was culminating against the few Moslem women who showed signs of any public activity.

The sheet in the new journal bears the heading: "Women's Day." It contains articles written by women, such as a health report by Sefide Ali-Hanum, Turkey's first woman doctor, and an article criticizing the women's union and signed "the mother-in-law."

There are accounts of women's activities in various parts of the country and from a suburb of Constantinople under the heading: "The Advance of Feminists," and the statement: "We have had two teas and a ball in one week!"

TIMBER PURCHASED ON SIUSLAW RIVER

News of considerable import to Florence, Lane county, is contained in press dispatches this week, in which it is learned that W. C. Ribenaek of the Stout Lumber Co., Coos Bay operators, has purchased all stock of the Siuslaw Boom company from J. O. Elrod of Portland.

Says the Port Umpqua Courier, L. Berman, head of the Florence bank will have management of the company as reorganized. The new officers are: W. C. Ribenaek, president; R. T. Bourne, vice-president; and Jay Bowerman, secretary and treasurer.

The offices of the Siuslaw Boom company will be moved from Eugene to Florence.

J. O. Elrod, president of the Umpqua Mills and Timber of this city, held the Starrett and Hovey holdings during the past year. The recent sale of the Siuslaw Boom company's holdings to W. C. Ribenaek, an individual.

Timber land of 14,000 acres, containing 800,000,000 feet of timber.

The Army will be elaborately decorated for the Big Noise Ball at the Army New Years eve. Everybody in the county ought to be there. We guarantee you a real stepping party.

NEWSY BITS

Anna Oland, of Marshfield, has brought suit against the state industrial accident commission, asking $30 monthly for life, or until marriage, from August 16, 1925, and $500 doctor bills and funeral expenses. The plaintiff avers that her husband L. F. Oland died of heart strain while working for the state highway commission on the Roseburg-Coos county highway. The commission had refused to admit any liability in the case.

George L. Baker, mayor of Portland, has announced that he would positively not be a candidate for the republican nomination for governor of Oregon at the next primary election, in reply to reports that he intended to become a candidate for governor.

At the same time, Sam Korer, secretary of state, declared that he was seriously considering announcing his candidacy for the republican gubernatorial nomination, but that he had come to no definite decision as to what he finally would do.
