LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Wants Spitting Ordinance Enforced.

ROSEBURG, Ore., Dec. 29. — News-Review: Every Spring the city makes a great campaign about cleaning up our premises, but every day I notice filth on the city sidewalks due to spitting thereon, which ought to be prohibited. If there is such a city ordinance, it ought to be enforced. If not, one ought to be enacted. It is not only a filthy habit to spit on the sidewalks, but a dangerous one as well. It scatters dangerous germs and spreads disease. Why not try and stop it?

Respectfully submitted,
EDWARD R. FICKENSCHER.

This is clean-up week for children. The Imperial Cleaners will make it worth while.

UMPQUA VALLEY BROCCOLI HAS GOOD NAME IN CANADA

"In meeting the produce merchants of Canada it is a pleasure to note the high opinion they have of the Umpqua Valley Broccoli," writes Foster Butner of the Umpqua Broccoli Exchange, who is on his way east to meet with produce dealers and arrange markets for the exceptionally large crop anticipated for the coming season. Mr. Butner will spend several weeks in the east and middle west, and expects to arrange for representation in a great many of the markets of the country.

"It is well," Mr. Butner says in his letter, "for our growers to know that we must keep up on our reputation by constantly keeping up our grade and full pack. Each and every crate bearing the brand 'U. S. No. 1' with the growers' name should be an advertisement for Oregon. We have built up a good name now and it is up to keep it, even to improve it. While we have a large crop in prospect, I believe we can sell every crate at a fair price if each and every grower will see that his crates contain broccoli of a quality good enough to exhibit at a county fair."

FREE SERVICE

Referring to our ad in this paper last week, offering one hour of mechanic's time free to help Chevrolet owners in servicing and caretaking of their cars, by this we mean adjustment of valves, brakes, wheels, also oiling, greasing, care of body, tires, paint, or anything that comes under service, and not general repairing. This applies to all Chevrolet owners in Douglas county any time except Saturdays and Sundays.

SENATOR STANFIELD OFFERS NEW BILL TO AID COUNTIES

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 30.—Eighteen Oregon counties and one in Washington should receive payments of federal funds approximating $400,000 annually under the terms of a bill now being prepared by Senator Stanfield, which provides that they be compensated for taxes lost by the return of the Oregon & California railroad land grants to the public domain in 1916.

The measure would authorize payment of sums from the federal treasury equivalent to those levied by the counties on the land while it was under private ownership, the government to be compensated from funds received by sale of timber lands on the revested tracts. This fund now amounts to $3,563,274 but the federal government and the Oregon & California railroad company hold liens against it amounting to $1,571,044 and $5,250,000, respectively, a total of $7,821,044.

The counties which would benefit include Benton, Clackamas, Columbia, Coos Curry, Douglas Jackson, Josephine, Klamath, Lincoln, Linn, Marion Multnomah, Polk, Tillamook, Washington, Yamhill and Lane in Oregon, and Clark in Washington.

GIRL "EXTRAS" SURPRISE DIRECTOR OF MOVIES BY IGNORANCE OF SMOKING

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.—A motion picture director received the surprise of his life when twenty out of thirty "extra" girls employed in a new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production confessed they did not know how to smoke cigarettes.

A group of cigarette smoking flappers was needed in a scene, when the director, Benjamin Christianson, told the property man to pass around the cigarettes. Then the girls admitted that they could not smoke.

"What a blow to the type of magazine that makes movie girls appear so sophisticated," says Christianson.

ROSEBURG MAN SEEKS PROMOTION IN RESERVE

EUGENE, Dec. 30—Second Lieutenant Maurice C. Bowker, infantry-reserve, resident of Roseburg, was examined by a board of local regular army and reserve officers here yesterday for a commission as first lieutenant.

While no details of the examination were given out, it is understood that Lieutenant Bowker had qualified. The candidate is a graduate of the R. O. T. C. and has held a second lieutenant's commission for three years.

Lieutenant Bowker is attached to the 382nd infantry regiment. The board of officers conducting yesterday's examination was composed of Major John P. Bubb (DOL) infantry, U. S. A., Major Carl W. Robbins, medical-reserve and First Lieutenant William E. Milne, ordnance-reserve.

"SANDY"

By ELENORE MEHERIN

THE STORY SO FAR

Sandy McNeil, in love with life, marries Ben Murillo, a rich Italian, to please her impoverished family. Tyranny by Murillo and frequent quarrels follows. A son dies at birth. Bob McNeil, her uncle, aids in plans for Sandy and her mother to take a trip to Honolulu. There she meets Ramon Worth, who saves her life in the surf. On the same steamer home he declares his love. Murillo says he will never release her. Judith Moore, a cousin, tells Sandy love is everything. Murillo overtakes her as she goes for a tryst with Ramon. He appears, unexpectedly, at a party she is giving for her friends. After the party he strikes her. She leaves his house and accepts the kindly attentions of Raman, whose home she shares. She then accepts a position in the city and boards out. They are spending an evening at Ramon's home when they are disturbed by a knock on the door.

Go on with the story from here:

CHAPTER 62

Sandy, listening behind the closed door of the kitchen, heard Ramon move lazily to the phonograph; heard him drawl: "Wait a moment—don't knock the place down."

The latch slid back. A girl's voice: "Hello, ole darling. Where's your lady friend? We've come to fetch you. We're rounding up all the clan for a big time."

The the man spoke. All the blood in Sandy's body flew to her head. She waited, limp with foreboding. "Yes—where is she? Saw you tearing up the roads this afternoon. Bring her along." She knew that voice.

"Sorry I can't oblige you. Quite sure it was me you saw this afternoon?"

"Oh, quite! All right with us. We're not particular!" The man laughing — rubbing his hands. "Come along."

"Thanks. Don't feel like a party tonight."

"Too bad—thought you'd come and bring some cheerie-o."

"Want a drink?"

"Never refuse."

Glasses clinking — a toast — a laugh. Sandy with her face pressed against the door grew weak with suspense.

Someone walking—coming toward the kitchen—asking for water. The girl.

"Not there—here—" Ramon, his voice easy, intercepting her.

At last: "Well—be good! We're on our way—"

• • •

He opened the door with a quiet: "They're gone."

She went over to the sink and let the water run on her hands.

"Of course they saw my hat and coat."

"They didn't. I put both away before I let them in."

"The girl almost came in here!"

"No, she didn't."

Without looking at him—her lips tight: "Who was the man?"

"One of the crowd from Nell Drury's house party."

"It sounded like Jack Horace. I could swear it was Jack Horace."

Silence. His arm about her waist. "Why are you so excited? Don't begin to imagine things. Suppose it was he—"

"Was it?"

He rubbed her fingers slowly: "Yes—it was—"

"And he saw me with you this afternoon. Oh, Lord!" she turned from him, flung across the room, sank heavily on the couch before the fire. "Now—I'm done for! The whole of Santa Barbara will know of this—oh, Lord!"

Jack Horace had known of Ramons' interest when they were in Honolu. It was he who told Ramon of Sandy's unhappy marriage —and that she ran away on her honeymoon. She and Jack Horace had been in school together.

She pressed her hands, biting her white, dry lips. "Everyone in Santa Barbara will know of it before the week is out." She got up suddenly, shaking and weak—found her hat and coat. "Take me home, Ramon—"

• • •

He was very quiet. His hands were cold. He spoke gently: "Listen, Sandy, we were traveling forty miles an hour. They weren't even sure it was a girl with me. They recognized the car. If Jack Horace dreamed it was you, he would have let me know this. He's that type, isn't he?"

She kept her face averted—wanting to cry—blistered with shame as thought she had been discovered in some low, guilty deed.

"Anyway—take me home, Raman. They'll be dropping in again tomorrow—oh, please—I want to go."

He locked the doors and windows. He got a scarf and wrapped it about her neck. He switched out the light and gripped her in his arms, pleading: "If you want to go, dear—I'll take you. Don't be frightened. I wouldn't lie to you. He didn't see you. He'd never in a thousand years dream it was you—"

"Oh, all right—I guess so—" But she was on fire with impatience, gasping with hysterical relief when they were finally in the car, flying along the rough, dusty road—wanting him to go quicker and quicker. She felt cowardly and demeaned.

• • •

They stood a moment at her door.

In the shadows she saw his pale, worn face and winced.

He ran his hand over his hair: "Don't think about it, Sandy. That wouldn't happen again in ten years."

She nodded mutely, raising her face for him to kiss her and smiled.

Then she went with quick, light steps and frightened heart to her room.

Suppose Jack Horace had pulled open the door of the kitchen. And he would tell everybody in Santa Barbara how he'd caught her red handed—living with a man.....

In the dark, she felt her skin turn crimson. She pulled the blankets over her shoulders, sinking down, trying bluffly to say: "I don't care!" She clung to many sweet, glowing moments—that night when the burnished moon swung over the waters and they stood in the holy quiet speaking of love. Brave and beautiful . . . .

She turned from this flushing—a little sick—desperate with the wish to put out her hand and wipe everything away—EVERYTHING.

Suddenly she sat upright, saying fearfully: "I love him. Don't I love him. Oh, Lord—" she remembered Ramon's white, worn face and cowered.

• • • •

In the morning he phoned. She didn't want to see him. She said: "I think I'll ride up to the city and visit my cousin.I've not seen her in ages."

"I'll drive you up. I'm going there tonight, anyway."

She shrank from this. But when she went to the train Ramon was there.

"Please, Sandy. Let me drive you up. Don't make a catasrophe of a mere chance like that. No one will see us."

"Oh, on a holiday like this, Ramon, hundreds of machines will be passing."

"You can pull down the shades." He kept pleading—oppressing her because he had a white, stricken look.

Finally she said: "All right," and huddled down, quiet and unhappy wishing she could run away; run far off; escape from everything.

He drove quickly till they reached the park . . loitering here at the Chain of Lakes. He said, solemnly taking her hands: "I'm going to take you away, Sandy. I planned it last night. That's the only way we can keep our happiness."

It always weighted her when he talked in this grim, despondent way.

"Will you come with me, Sanday? You will, because I mean it."

"Oh, ask me next week, Ramon. I'm not in the eloping mood today."

She bantered, fighting off his depression. She was delighted when he finally released her and she was running up the steps of the white flat in Fulton street where Judith lived.

Breeze in her—sunny and gay—charm Judith—go off on a jaunt together—forget she had a care in the world. Remember only that she was young—ready for larks.

Judith was at home alone. They threw their arms around each other. They sat a long time over their lunch—elbows hunched on the table.

Judith was in the highest spirits, laboring with some beautiful excitement.

"A man?" Sandy asked.

"Two or three; I'm just that attractive."

But when they went to Judith's room a dancing dress was spread out on the bed. "I'm stepping tonight—going to the St. Francis." Joyously: "I've never done that before!"

"Who?"

"A man I met—you don't know him—" Judith was ducking to the closet, getting out her suit. They were going to a movie. As she emerged, Sandy caught a glimpse of her in the mirror, glowing—a lovely look in Judith's eyes.

"I don't know him? Is this his picture?" Sandy picked up the photograph of a boy about 23, youth uppermost in the firm lips and straight-glancing eyes. Judith came with a little rush and grabbed the picture from her.

"That's only the boy next door."

"Indeed. Jude, you little old sneak! Nice chap, isn't he. So you've learned about loving from him? He's the one that could make you throw everything to the winds?"

Judith stood a moment, burning from head to foot. Then she said swiftly: "Oh, yes—when I love it will be like that!"

"Well, I envy you, Jude. Lord, how I envy you!" She no longer felt light-hearted—she was as eager now to get away as she had been to come.

• • •

Her visit to Judith made her feel old. All that Judith had—even that lovely, growing look in Judith's eyes—she had lost. And lost for good.

"Well, I don't care," she said quietly, as she rode back on the train that evening. But she thought of the depressing routine her life had taken—that wretched job—lonely evenings—nothing but the weekend visits of Ramon.

She paced the floor of her room that night storming with rebellion. She deliberately lay in bed the next morning, staying home from work.

"You'll get docked," Tillie Swanson told her when she appeared Tuesday morning.

"I'm rich—I should care!"

Brazen the whole world—that's what she'd do. The whole world had combined to cheat her.

But when Saturday came she wouldn't go with Ramon. "Not this week," she pleaded.

The look in his eyes afflicted her. "Don't look at me so, Ramon—as though I were stabbing you—"

And the next week she went. But she wore a big hat—and she kept her head down. "Lock the door good—pull down all the shades. Never let anyone in again —"

She began to dread detection. One week he couldn't come. She was overjoyed. "It's the tension—the nervous tension," she told herself. And she wrote a long, tender letter to him, whispering to herself: "No one could be kinder than he. He was an angel to me—"

It was August—late in August. A cruel and bitter thing happened. They neared the cottage. They were at the the door. Ramon was just about to open it when it flashed back and light poured over them.

The atmosphere of the Orient pervades the new Oriental Gardens, Roseburg's magnificent dance pavilion. Be there at the opening next Wednesday night, Jan. 6.

O. A. C. BASKETBALL TEAM MAKING FINE SHOWING.

The O. A. C. Basketball team has been making a fine showing on its barnstorming tour into Southern California and has won four out of five games. The team will end its tour at Pasadena on New Year's day, when they will witness the East and West football classic. Bill Burr, former Roseburg high school star, who is playing guard with the Aggie team this year, has been making a fine showing and in a recent game at Oakland, with the Knights of Columbus team, scored 10 of the 30 points which the Aggies annexed.
