EUGENE V. DEBS' NEW NEWSPAPER MAKES BOW.

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

CHICAGO, Dec. 31. — Eugene V. Debs' new social publication, "American Appeal," appeared today, proclaimed by the editor in chief in an "international greeting," as "the exponent of the interational socialist movement as well as the official mouthpiece of the socialist party in America."

The initial copy appeared as a seven column, four page weekly, containing a "Debs column", a signed article by Upton Sinclair, several articles and stories by lesser lights and much editorial comment.

The moving picture, "Stream of Life," will be shown at the Methodist church New Year's Eve, at 7:30 and 9:30 o'clock. Admission free.

CHEMAWA HOOPSTERS WIN.

SALEM, Ore., Dec. 31.—The Chemawa Indians defeated the Washington high school team of Portland in a fast basketball game last night by a score of 23 to 18. Matt of the Indians was high point man of the game. Weinei starred for Washington.

The atmosphere of the Orient pervades the new Oriental Gardens, Roseburg's magnificent dance pavilion. Be there at the opening next Wednesday night, Jan. 6.

THEATRES

Antlers Theatre.

A truly delightful and surprising film is "The Midshipman", starring Ramon Novarro, which opened at the Antlers Theatre last night for a run of two days. It concerns the adventures , of a youth at the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

A great cast plays with Novarro including Harriet Hammond, Wesley Barry, Harold Goodwin, William Boyd and Kathleen Key. Christy Cabbane was the director, and Carey Wilson the author of this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film.

Majestic Theatre.

John B. O'Brien, who directed Josie Sedgwick in her latest starring play, "Daring Days," has staged one of the best screen fights seen in a long time. O'Brien has worked out something a bit new in the way of a battle in which a large number of men figure and has succeeded in getting a real thrill. This latest Universal-Blue Streak Western is booked to be filmed at the Majestic Theatre commencing Friday. A splendid group of players support Miss Sedgwick.

Antlers Theatre.

Set in a place where every man was law unto himself, and at a time when neighbor was only another name for enemy, "The Splendid Road," First National's latest release is said to have acquired thrills without conscious effort.

The film deals with the gold boom period of California in the days of '49. Anna Q. Nilsson, Lionel Barrymore and Robert Frazer are featured.

Frank Lloyd directed the picture which is based on Vingie E. Roe's successful novel of the same name.

The scenes aboard the "Colonial Dame," a Baltimore slipper ship of the period, and in Sacramento are said to be accurate historic duplications. At the Antlers Friday and Saturday.

Liberty Theatre.

Ken Maynard, leading man of Associated Exhibitors' latest Strongheart picture, "North Star", which is coming to the Liberty Theatre next week, found his work in this picture the most enjoyable of any production he has yet taken part in.

Strongheart is the reason. Meynard has always been violently addicted to dogs of all sorts. He indulged in mongrel pets from the age of six years upwards, and has even owned some very valuable animals.

This constant ownership of one pup or another gave Maynard an understanding of dogs not always found in humans, and he found work with Strongheart all the more interesting because this intelligent dog actor was a type he had not previously known.

Strongheart, strangely enough, seemed to know Maynard's understanding and sympathy and responded to it cordially. He did his best work when Maynard was in the scene with him, and always signified rising spirits when he greeter Maynard at the beginning of the day. A subtle communion seemed to exist between the two, who would go off together when out of a scene, and watch from a distance.

"SANDY"

By ELENORE MEHERIN

THE STORY SO FAR

Sandy McNeil, in love with life, marries Ben Murillo, a rich Italian, to please her impoverished family. Tyranny by Murillo and frequent quarrels follow. A son dies at birth. Bob McNeil, her uncle, aids in plans for Sandy and her mother to take a trip to Honolulu. There she meets Ramon Worth, who saves her life in the surf. On the same steamer home he declares his love. Murillo says he will never release her. Judith Moore, a cousin, tells Sandy love is everything. Murillo overtakes her as she goes for a tryst with Ramon. He appears, unexpectedly, at a party she is giving for her friends. After the party he strikes her. She leaves his house and accepts the kindly attentions of Ramon, whose home she shares. She then accepts a position in the city and boards out. One evening she and Ramon drive out to his home. They are about to open the door when they notice a light burning inside.

Go on with the story from here:

CHAPTER 63

She stood before them laughing, holding aloft an immense gleaming candle. In its amber glow she flashed out, a streak of color—a girl with brilliant eyes and lighted smile. She wore a long, purple kimono draped in a low surplice. Jetty curls on the top of her head.

Opening the door, she spring back with a laugh: "Darling—late!"

Then she saw Sandy.

And Sandy saw Ramon—the startled fury of his look; the shaking of his lips. "Some mistake! You've made a mistake."

Before either girl had a chance to move he stepped between them, caught Sandy's arm and rushed her back to the machine.

He talked rapidly, hoarse and breathless. "God — insufferable nerve — overflow from some house party—ginned up, I guess. Thought they could take possession. Figured I wouldn't be here. I'll see about it."

He whipped out a handkerchief, mopped it over his face as he went striding up the path.

* * *

This time the door opened softly—a soft, tinkling laugh: "Ramon! Alone. You sent her away?" The flashing eyes wicked with delight.

He pushed her into the room, shut the door.

"What are you doing here?"

The girl came up to him with a smile. Seeing his stony face, she shrugged: "What am I doing? You don't know? You have not the faintest idea?" She tossed the dark curls and was about to fling her arms about his neck: "How good to see you again!"

He stepped back. "You had no right to come here. You'll have to leave. I've made other plans."

The girl's eyes blazed; color sweeping to the roots of her hair. She threw her head back and regarded him across a burning silence.

"Get on your things. I'll drive you to the hotel."

"At this hour of the night."

"Right now."

"Ramon Worth, are you ordering me from this house?"

"I'm forced to ask you to leave and to hurry. After two years didn't you take a considerable chance coming here?"

"I wrote you a letter. Didn't you get it? When I heard the machine I thought you'd come in answer to it."

"You've made a great mistake. Please hurry."

* * *

The girl stood very quiet, studying him insolently with furious, reproachful eyes. "Hurry? So that you can bring my successor here? Suppose I won't hurry?"

He turned quickly, pulling open the door. "I'll give you five minutes."

He was not whiter than Sandy when he came back and leaned on the door. "Just as I thought—walked in and took possession—She's leaving—she's packing her things."

"I don't care what she's doing." Sandy shut her eyes—colder and more wretched than she had ever been in all her life. "Drive me back to San Jose."

"Listen—" he tried to take her hand.

"Drive me back! I won't listen—don't talk—don't make it worse. I saw. I heard. Don't stand there! I want to leave."

He clenched his fists on the handle of the door, drawing his shoulders up with harsh, struggling breaths as though he fought against suffocation. "Sandy—please—I'm not to blame—"

She made a quick movement to spring from the car.

"No—don't do that. I'll take you." He lurched down heavily, sitting with his hands gripping the wheel, his face bloodless and rigid.

He seemed unable to move except for the oppressive breaths bursting in long, rasping intervals.

"Start—oh, please start—"

"You can't mean this. I'll tell you—"

She clapped her hands over her ears. "Let me out—let me go!"

"Oh, Sandy — sit down — I'll start!"

* * *

He sent the car with a wild shot down the road. And suddenly he leaned forward with a hoarse sound like a sob and began driving like a madman.

Sandy sank against the seat and hid her face. "He's going to kill us. He's going to dash us to death. I don't care!"

The machine tore through the darkness, careening over the ruts like a crazy thing. They went dizzying down the grade between Carmel and Monterey. The pines, long quivers of black, retreated hastily to the forest.

Shadows loomed and thronged and clashed. They rushed togetner in black angles with the white road nosing between.

"You'll kill us," she murmured faintly, distraught images going helter-skelter through her mind. Image of herself running down the steps of Murillo's house, stumbling along the road, cowering in the bushes, sinking with aching relief in Ramon's arms. Herself, again, rushing through wind and rain calling him back to her because a tree kept tapping on the window pane and the dog whined against her knee.

Images of the two of them standing on the rocks in the midnight on the edge of dark, troubled waters, two beings alone, the world shut out.

And now the two of them flying through the tumultuous clashing shadows; flying through blackness and havoc to their deaths.

"Stop—oh, stop," she protested, shutting her eyes against the blanched, rigid face.

And suddenly she felt the car slowing—coming to a pause.

He turned with an almost imperceptible movement, confronting her with that gaunt, beseeching smile.

She thought, sick with panic: "He's going to talk. . . oh, Lord, now he's going to talk."

"Do I deserve this, Sandy?"

"Don't lie to me, Ramon."

"I'm not lying to you. I'm not to blame."

"I saw. I heard."

"Oh, what did you hear? I only thought to save you in the first moment. I'll tell you—"

This half admission that he knew the girl in the purple kimona made her suddenly weak with the sinking and weight dropping on her heart. Ramon knew her! So he'd brought her, too, to that house? And they also had stood against the poetic tree in the midnight.

A soft whimper ran to her lips. She shrank from his look.

"It was two years ago, Sandy."

"I don't want to hear. Drive on."

"You've got to hear."

"No! What does it matter now? It doesn't matter, I tell you!"

He went on like one driven. "Before I went to Honolulu—I, I've not heard from her in two years. God, if a ghost opened that door, it wouldn't have been more shocking."

He took her hand, reached for the other, pressed his face against them. "I didn't know you then, Sandy. I didn't dream of you. It was two summers ago."

His face was icy against her burning hands. But she didn't try to release them. She kept saying: "No—don't talk. You only make it worse."

"Two summers ago she was visiting friends. I—I found her fascinating. In a month it was over. I went away. We wrote two or three letters. I forgot her. I've scarcely thought of her since we parted. She was in New York. Now she's come back. She says she wrote to me. I didn't receive it.—She came here. Say something—oh, won't you even speak to me, Sandy?"

She let her head lie back against the seat. Unable to think; almost unable to breathe, she answered: "Drive me back. I want to get home."

RALPH HAND AND BOB KRUSE STAGE EXCITING DRAW

EUGENE, Ore., Dec. 31.—Ralph Hand, Eugene, and Bob Kruse, of Portland, wrestled to a draw in the headline event of the Heilig mat card here last night. Each had one fall, Hand taking the first in one hour and 12 minutes, and Kruse taking the second just as the gong sounded for final time.

With three minutes remaining, Kruse was struggling desperately to pin Hand down, while Hand was striving to keep off the mat. Referee Bill Hayward patted Kruse on the back for a down just as the final gong sounded, and the match ended with a fall apiece.

Hand employed a toe hold for his fall, while Kruse won with a short arm scissors.

"Wildcat" Pete and Ted Brown went one hour to a draw in the main preliminary event. Each had one fall to his credit.

U. OF O. STAR HOOPSTERS "FLUNK" IN THEIR GRADES

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

EUGENE, Ore., Dec. 31.—Ted Gillenwaters, two-year veteran guard, and Charles Jost, who earned his letter last year at guard, will be ineligible for basketball this season, according to the "scandal sheet," a list of grades of university students, just published. The two players did not make the required grades, according to the list.

Coach William Reinhart and his players, on a barnstorming tour in California, are not aware of the fact that the two men will be ineligible for the remainder of the season.

The atmosphere of the Orient pervades the new Oriental Gardens, Roseburg's magnificent dance pavilion. Be there at the opening next Wednesday night, Jan. 6.

BURGLARIES FRIGHTENED BY RETURN OF OWNER ALCOVE CONFECTIONERY

An attempted robbery was frustrated Tuesday night by E. A. Petty, proprietor of the Alcove Confectionery. Mr. Petty and his wife left their place of business about 10:30 p. m. and went to their home. They happened to remember, however, that they had left some needed articles in the store and Mr. Petty returned to the confectionery to get them. As he opened the door he heard a commotion inside and saw two men going out through the back way. He found that they had gained entrance through the vacant storeroom on the Main street side of the building, and had retreated that way. It was too dark to get a description of them. They apparently had just entered the building and had not yet had time to make away with any of the goods.

The finest ballroom in Southern Oregon. The Oriental Gardens, will open Wednesday, Jan. 6. Thousands of dollars spent to make this ball room please you. The orchestra is the best ever and we're here to stay.
