SCHOLARSHIPS ARE GIVING DIVIDENDS

CHICAGO, Jan. 8.—Industry has discovered more than baggy trousers and moaning saxophones on the college campus and, satisfied with the findings, is annually contributing thousands of dollars to Middle Western colleges and universities for specialized work in their research laboratories.

The steel manufacturer, the mining engineer, the meat packer and the chewing gum manufacturer are appropriating funds for the specialized work and for the maintenance of special departments, equipment and instructors. Commercial and professional organizations are joining a widespread variety of industries in providing for study in their own or general fields.

In most cases, the scholarships and fellowships are given to students who will make special study in the field in which the donor is directly interested. An asphalt company contributes to study of asphalt materials, a chemical manufacturer offers financial aid, for study in commercial chemistry and the mining concern lends a helping hand to the student interested in ceramics. One big producer of railroad equipment maintains twenty scholarships for scientific training in agriculture and animal husbandry. The fellowships and scholarships vary in value from $500 to $1500.

At least $21,762 is providing for scholarships and fellowships at the University of Wisconsin. A well-known poster advertising company is contributing the largest individual sum, $6,000, which maintains two fellowships open to graduate students only. More than $25,000 is available to students at the University of Minnesota, in research scholarships. Nearly every department of the university has received one or more substantial gifts.

A number of scholarships in social science and political economy are open to students at the University of Chicago. For the study of meat packing and handling processes, an annual gift of $2500, for three years, has been made. Approximately 35 scholarships, for study in a wide variety of subjects, are maintained at the University of Illinois. The income from a fund of $10,000 is available to a fellow in chemistry or chemical engineering.

Of unusual interest among the Northwestern University scholarships are a number for young men interested in fire insurance and allied lines of business. Provided by certain of the large fire insurance companies, they cover full tuition for the university's two-year course in fire insurance. Merchandising and advertising are concerned in several scholarships open to both men and women.

Scholarships at Ohio State University average $750. Among them is a scholarship of $150 a year contributed by a Philadelphia textile company and to go only to a disabled soldier.

Five of the twenty agricultural scholarships are allotted to agricultural colleges where the students do the most efficient work in the five lines of stock judging; a sixth goes to the college scoring highest in the five combined classes and the other fourteen are distributed on the basis of total cash prizes won by the institutions on entries in the open live stock classes. They are available in thirteen Middle West institutions.

RADIO CODE OF STANDARDS IS AIM OF COMMITTEE WORK

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—(A. P.)—Having discovered that the public wants standardized radio parts, the manufacturers have gone back to the consumers to find out how they wish them made. Committees of manufacturers are now at work on the replies to thousands of questionnaires, from which will be formulated a code of standards.

Radio thus becomes one of the first great industries of its size, from which the public expects that the Smith company's parts must fit the Jones company's apparatus.

"The dealer and the consumer have both been seriously affected by this irregularity of parts," says A. J. Carter, chairman of the standards committee of the Radio Manufacturers Association. "There isn't a man in the radio game today who hasn't wished for a Moses to lead the industry out of the wilderness of misfits. The Radio Manufacturers Association is tackling this problem and we are going to carry on until the work is completed."

The standards committee is divided into thirteen sub-committees each with a particular line of apparatus and their finds are reported to a committee on co-ordination. This committee will draw up a code of standards which it is expected all the leading radio manufacturers will adopt.
